The complaint

Mr H opened a self-invested personal pension ("SIPP") with Carey Pensions UK LLP now Options UK Personal Pensions LLP ("Options"). Mr H switched his existing personal pension to the SIPP but then switched to another SIPP operator soon after. Mr H's complaint is that Options acted unfairly by failing to undertake appropriate due diligence and he's suffered a loss in his SIPP as a result.

What happened

I will first set out my understanding of the various parties involved and their roles in this complaint.

Carey, now Options

Options is a SIPP provider and administrator, regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority ("FCA"). Options is authorised, in relation to SIPPs, to arrange (bring about) deals in investments, deal in investments as principal, establish, operate or wind up a pension scheme and make arrangements with a view to transactions in investments.

Options is not authorised to advise on investments.

Mr H

Mr H is the complainant in this case. He is represented by a law firm, but I'll refer to Mr H throughout.

Mr H has told us that he was cold called by a business I'll call the "Introducer" that recommended that he switch his pension to Options to make unregulated investments.

On 8 January 2014 Mr H signed a number of documents:

He signed a document from the Introducer headed "Pension Review Option" and included the following declaration:

> "I confirm that I have been offered the option of an IFA pension review leading to a fully advised report and recommendations, and an information-only review (non-advised)."

Mr H ticked the box corresponding to the information-only review option.

Mr H also signed a "Execution Only Document" from the Introducer that included the following declaration:

> "I confirm that I have been offered the option of an advised position, utilizing the services of an Independent Financial Advisor, and an Execution-only option. I confirm that these options have been explained to me fully and it is my decision to follow a non-advised execution-only pension strategy."

The declaration went on to include a number of points that in summary, were as follows:

- Mr H understood no party, including the Introducer or Options had given or would give him advice on his choice of investments or the suitability of a SIPP.
- Mr H confirmed it was his decision to switch his pension to a SIPP and make the investments he had chosen.
- Mr H understood alternative investments are regarded as high risk.
- If in future Mr H changed his position to request advice then the Introducer would introduce him to an appropriately qualified IFA.

Mr H also signed a “Terms of Business” document with the Introducer and amongst other things it set out that:

- The Introducer is an independent company that introduces individuals to a range of products and services from different providers. It is an agent of several product providers, but it isn’t itself a provider of any products and it can’t offer advice in relation to any products or services.
- All the products the Introducer offers are offered free from financial advice and are not regulated by the FCA.
- The Introducer won’t keep under review the products and services it arranges, but it may make contact in future to discuss the relative merits of a product or service it feels may be of interest.
- The Introducer will receive commission from product providers when one of their products or services is used.
- The Introducer is not authorised by the FCA.

Mr H’s SIPP application to Options was also dated 8 January 2014. The section of the form about details of investments to be made in the SIPP was left blank.

The application form included the following:

> “Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Limited have not provided any advice and will not be responsible for the suitability or appropriateness of your decision to establish a SIPP.
> This application should be used if you are a client establishing a SIPP without advice. You have made this decision independently and are aware of the implications of this decision.”

The SIPP was opened on 22 January 2014 and Mr H’s personal pension of approximately £40,000 was switched to the SIPP in February 2014.

Mr H signed declarations in March 2014 to make two unregulated investments. Those investments didn’t go ahead and it appears that, instead, Mr H instructed Options to switch his entire fund to a different SIPP operator – Guinness Mahon – in around August 2014. The reason given on the request to switch to Guinness Mahon was:

"wants alternative investments and a SIPP provider that will this without any restrictions"

It appears that after the switch to Guinness Mahon, Mr H went on to make three unregulated investments. Those investments have failed and Mr H suffered a loss. Mr H made a claim to the Financial Services Compensation Scheme ("FSCS") as Guinness Mahon had ceased to trade some time ago. Mr H has received some compensation from the FSCS but doesn't believe that he's been compensated for Options' role in his loss.

Firm A

Firm A was a UK based company. It was involved in the "distribution" of an overseas property-based investment called Oasis - Salinas Sea. It was not regulated by the FCA. It was not therefore authorised to advise on investments covered by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 ("FSMA") in the UK.

One of the directors of Firm A was Mr C.

As I understand it, Options relationship with Firm A began in April 2011. Firm A was an introducer of business to Options and Options has said it received 91 introductions between April 2011 and November 2013.

The Introducer

The Introducer was another UK based company. It purported to operate a pension review service. It was not regulated by the FCA.

Mr X was a director of the Introducer. Mr C (the same Mr C as above) also became a director in December 2013.

We've also been provided with notes of a meeting between Options, Mr X and Mr C from 2012. The notes indicate that the Introducer and Firm A operated together. I'll comment more on this below.

Options' says its relationship with the Introducer began in November 2013. But it appears from other cases that we've seen that Options did accept introductions earlier than this.

Options has previously said on a number of cases that its relationship with the Introducer ended in "early 2014" when it says it decided to stop accepting business from unregulated introducers.

The Introducer was dissolved following liquidation on 4 December 2021.

The due diligence carried out by Options on the Introducer

In other cases, Options has provided us with a document titled "Business Profile for Non-Regulated Introducers" that the Introducer completed in November 2013. This was effectively a questionnaire. At the top of this form, the following was set out by Options:

"As an FCA regulated pensions company, we are required to carry out due diligence as best practice on unregulated introducer firms looking to introduce clients to us, to gain some insight into the business they carry out. We therefore request that a Director/Partner of the Firm complete and sign this Profile questionnaire and our Terms of Business agreement as part of our internal compliance requirements."

The profile questionnaire was signed by Mr X. The following are the main responses from the Introducer to the questions posed in the questionnaire:

- The Introducer had been trading for two years at that point.

- The Introducer had nine agents who were self-employed. The investments promoted by the Introducer were "Best International: ABC Bond, Borgo Alle Vigne Bond, Dubai Car Parks, Student Property Bond, Salinas Sea and Dolphin". The Introducer said there were four other SIPP providers which had accepted those products.

- The Introducer got its clients by direct marketing and an in-house call centre and that they took prospects through a "process of educating them about alternative investments".

- The Introducer's average client was 40-60 years old, either employed or self-employed, with an average salary of £30,000-£50,000. "Almost all" its business involved pensions.

- The Introducer earned 7-9% commission from the companies that own the investments.

- The Introducer aimed to grow its client base by 100 clients a month.

- The Introducer's agents/consultants regularly undertook "full product and process training". The Introducer said that the consultants have a "good knowledge of the "traditional' pension market". Mr X or Mr C would call each client before completion of the transfer of their pension "to ensure that they have been treated responsibly and fairly".

- The Introducer worked with a regulated firm called "Firm X".

- The Introducer's documentation "describes clearly and without ambiguity" that it does not undertake any regulated activities.

And although not provided to our investigator on this case, I'm aware from other cases that Options has responded to queries and has said of its relationship with the Introducer and the due diligence checks it carried out that:

- The relationship with the Introducer began in November 2013.

- Options obtained Terms of Business from the Introducer signed by Mr X on 8 November 2013.

- Options also obtained anti-money laundering identification documents for Mr X and Mr C.

- Options understood the Introducer to be an introducer only. The Introducer's clients were obtained by a "UK Distribution Network" or by clients making contact via online contact request.

- Options paid no commission to the Introducer.

- Options proceeded on the basis that the Introducer did not give advice as they were not regulated to do so.

- The Introducer introduced 20 clients to Options.

- None of the clients introduced by the Introducer related to transfers in from Occupational Pension Schemes.

- 3.18% of the Introducer's introductions invested in non-mainstream investments. [NB I have assumed this response is an error as the Introducer dealt only with non-mainstream investments.]

The complaint

Mr H complained to Options on 4 June 2019. He said Options failed to treat him fairly when accepting business from an unregulated introducer.

Options did not uphold Mr H's complaint. In summary, it said that:

- Options provided an execution only SIPP administration service and this was clearly explained to Mr H in all the documentation provided to him.

- Options acted properly in accepting introductions from the Introducer. Options was permitted to accept introductions from unregulated introducers and it had strict processes in place when dealing with unregulated introducers.

- By signing the SIPP application and other documentation from the Introducer, Mr H confirmed that he had not received advice. Options was entitled to rely on this.

- Options had called Mr H to confirm his understanding of matters and to ask him if he'd received advice from the Introducer – he told Options he hadn't received any advice.

- Mr H's argument that Options had unfairly allowed him to make an unregulated investment was non-sensical. The investments he went on to make using his pension funds were made after the switch to the Guinness Mahon SIPP.

The complaint to the Financial Ombudsman Service

Mr H then referred his complaint to the Financial Ombudsman Service.

An investigator thought the complaint should be upheld. He made a number of points including:

- The Principles for Businesses and in particular Principles 2, 3 and 6 are relevant.

- The regulator has issued a number of publications which discussed the Principles and gave examples of good industry practice in relation to SIPP operators.

- Options was not responsible for giving Mr H advice. Nor was it responsible for checking any advice to him was suitable for his individual circumstances and requirements. But declining business does not amount to advice.

- Options was obliged to safeguard consumers against facilitating SIPPs that are unsuitable or detrimental to them and make enquiries about the nature or quality of proposed investments before deciding whether to accept them into their SIPPs.

- Options had not provided evidence relating to its due diligence carried out on the Introducer and the investigator said he was entitled to draw an inference from this.

- The investigator was not convinced that Options had taken the steps it should have done to prevent consumer detriment when accepting introductions from the Introducer.

- The investigator also believed that Options should have concluded the Introducer was carrying out regulated activities.

- In all the circumstances it was not fair and reasonable for Options to accept Mr H's application from the Introducer.

The investigator then set out how he thought Options should put things right. He said that it was fair to limit the compensation payable by Options to any losses that Mr H had suffered from the switch to Options in February 2014 up to the point at which the funds were switched out again to Guinness Mahon in around August 2014. He did not think it fair to include in the compensation the losses from the investments made in the Guinness Mahon SIPP that took place after this time. The investigator also said that Options should pay Mr H £200 for the distress and inconvenience caused to him.

Options didn't agree with the investigator's findings. It reiterated that it didn't think its actions had caused Mr H a loss. It said Mr H's loss was the result of things that happened after his switch away from the Options SIPP.

Another investigator then reviewed the case. He agreed with the findings of the initial investigator and added further reasons as to why, in his opinion, Options had acted unfairly and was responsible for paying Mr H compensation as a result of section 27 of FSMA.

As agreement couldn't be reached, the matter was passed to me to decide.

I issued a provisional decision on 8 August 2024. I explained why I intended to uphold the complaint and ask Options to pay compensation for losses caused by the initial pension switch to Options up to the point at which Mr H switched his pension to Guinness Mahon.

Mr H (via his representative) agreed with the provisional decision. Options didn't respond. So, having reviewed matters again, my findings below are the same as my provisional decision save for a small change to the redress that I notified the parties about.

What I've decided – and why

I've considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what's fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

I've considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what's fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

I've considered all the points made by the parties. However, I've not responded to them all below, instead concentrating on what I consider to be the key issues.

Relevant considerations

When considering what is fair and reasonable in the circumstances, I need to take account of relevant law and regulations, regulator's rules, guidance and standards, codes of practice and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time. This goes wider than the rules and guidance that come under the remit of the FCA. Ultimately, I'm required to make a decision that I consider to be fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case.

In my view, the FCA's Principles for Businesses are of particular relevance. The Principles for Businesses, which are set out in the FCA's Handbook "are a general statement of the fundamental obligations of firms under the regulatory system" (see PRIN 1.1.2G). Principles 2, 3 and 6 are of particular relevance here, in my view. These say:

> "Principle 2 – Skill, care and diligence – A firm must conduct its business with due skill, care and diligence.
> Principle 3 – Management and control – A firm must take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems.
> Principle 6 – Customers' interests – A firm must pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly."

Ouseley J in R (British Bankers Association) v Financial Services Authority [2011] EWHC 999 (Admin) held that it would be a breach of statutory duty if I were to reach a view on a complaint without taking the Principles into account in deciding what is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of a case. And, Jacobs J adopted a similar approach to the application of the Principles in R (Berkeley Burke SIPP Administration Ltd) v Financial Ombudsman Service [2018] EWHC 2878). I am therefore satisfied that the Principles are a relevant consideration that I must take into account when deciding this complaint.

The Berkeley Burke judgment also considers section 228 FSMA and the approach an ombudsman is to take when deciding a complaint. The judgment of Jacobs J upheld the lawfulness of the approach taken by the ombudsman in that complaint and included the Principles and good industry practice at the relevant time as relevant considerations that were required to be taken into account.

On 18 May 2020, the High Court handed down its judgment in the case of Adams v Options SIPP [2020] EWHC 1229 (Ch). Mr Adams subsequently appealed the decision of the High Court and, on 1 April 2021, the Court of Appeal handed down its judgment in Adams v Options UK Personal Pensions LLP [2021] EWCA Civ 474. I have taken account of both these judgments when making this decision on Mr H's case.

COBS 2.1.1R says that a firm must act honestly, fairly and professionally in accordance with the best interests of its client. I acknowledge that this overlaps with certain of the Principles, and that this rule was considered by HHJ Dight in the High Court case. Mr Adams pleaded that Options SIPP owed him a duty to comply with COBS 2.1.1R, a breach of which, he argued, was actionable pursuant to section 138(D) FSMA ("the COBS claim"). HHJ Dight rejected this claim and found that Options SIPP had complied with the best interests rule on the facts of Mr Adams' case.

The Court of Appeal rejected Mr Adams' appeal against HHJ Dight's dismissal of the COBS claim on the basis that Mr Adams was seeking to advance a case that was radically different to that found in his initial pleadings. The Court found that this part of Mr Adams' appeal did not so much represent a challenge to the grounds on which HHJ Dight had dismissed the COBS claim, but rather was an attempt to put forward an entirely new case.

I also note that in Adams, HHJ Dight found that the factual context of a case would inform the extent of the duty imposed by COBS 2.1.1R.

I think it is important to emphasise that I must determine this complaint by reference to what is, in my opinion, fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case. And, in doing that, I am required to take into account relevant considerations which include: law and regulations; regulators' rules, guidance and standards; codes of practice; and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time. This is a clear and relevant point of difference between this complaint and the judgments in Adams. That was a legal claim which was defined by the formal pleadings in Mr Adams' statement of case.

The regulatory publications

The FCA (and its predecessor, the Financial Services Authority) has issued a number of publications which remind SIPP operators of their obligations and which set out how they might achieve the outcomes envisaged by the Principles, namely:

- The 2009 and 2012 thematic review reports.
- The October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance.
- The July 2014 "Dear CEO" letter.

These reports provide a reminder that the Principles apply and are an indication of the kinds of things a SIPP operator might do to ensure it is treating its customers fairly and produce the outcomes envisaged by the Principles. In that respect, the publications which set out the regulator's expectations of what SIPP operators should be doing also go some way to indicate what I consider amounts to good industry practice, and I am, therefore, satisfied it is appropriate to take them into account.

In determining this complaint, I need to consider whether, in accepting Mr H's SIPP application, Options complied with its regulatory obligations as set out by the Principles to act with due skill, care and diligence, to take reasonable care to organise its business affairs responsibly and effectively, to pay due regard to the interests of its customers, to treat them fairly, and to act honestly, fairly and professionally. And, in doing that, I'm looking to the rules and the publications listed above to provide an indication of what Options could have done to comply with its regulatory obligations and duties.

Taking account of the factual context of this case, it is my view that in order for Options to meet its regulatory obligations (under the Principles and COBS 2.1.1R), it should have undertaken sufficient due diligence checks to consider whether to accept or reject particular applications for its SIPP and investments, with its regulatory obligations in mind.

I do not say that Options was under any obligation to advise Mr H on the SIPP and/or the underlying investments. Refusing to accept an application or permit an investment is not the same thing as advising Mr H on the merits of investing and/or switching to the SIPP.

What did Options' obligations mean in practice?

In this case, the business Options was conducting was its operation of SIPPs. I am satisfied that meeting its regulatory obligations when conducting this business would include deciding whether to accept or reject referrals of business and/or particular investments and/or. The regulatory publications provided some examples of good industry practice observed by the FSA and FCA during their work with SIPP operators including being satisfied that a particular introducer is appropriate to deal with.

It is clear from Options' non-regulated introducer profile/questionnaire in this case that it understood and accepted that as a non-advisory SIPP operator its obligations meant it had a responsibility to carry out due diligence on the Introducer and that it could and should decide not to do business with an introducer if it thought that was appropriate.

I am satisfied that, in order to meet the appropriate standards of good industry practice and the obligations set by the regulator's rules and regulations, Options should have carried out due diligence on the Introducer. And in my opinion, Options should have used the knowledge it gained from its due diligence to decide whether to accept or reject a referral of business.

Was the due diligence carried out by Options on the Introducer adequate?

Options doesn't dispute that it needed to undertake due diligence on the Introducer when it first began to accept introductions. Options has said that it first accepted introductions in November 2013, but I'm aware of some cases where it appears that introductions were accepted earlier. And it's important here to highlight that the Introducer was not a completely new unknown entity to Options in November 2013. Options knew that Mr C of Firm A was integrally involved with the Introducer. Mr C and Firm A had been making introductions to Options since April 2011 for investments by customers in Oasis - Salinas Sea.

Options knew that the Introducer and Firm A worked together to generate leads and investments. This is evidenced by a meeting note from as early as October 2012 between Mr C, Mr X and Options. The short-hand manuscript meeting note set out that:

- Mr X was at Firm A until 2008.

- Firm A was the "Distribution Business for Oasis". This was the Oasis - Salinas Sea investment that the Introducer also said it promoted.

- The Introducer was the lead generator of pension reviews and works with Firm Y and Firm Z.

- In respect of Firm Y – "Direct Clients – Only accept with robust process that includes client confirming execution only and has rev'd, read, understood KFD, T&C, Fees".

An internal Options email dated 25 November 2013 we've been provided on another case is also illustrative of the relationship between Firm A and the Introducer – and Options knowledge of the relationship. The Options employee writes regarding an application submitted by Mr C:

> "I didn't think we were taking on new business through [Firm A] which I notice [Mr C] is emailing from. From my discussion with [another Options colleague] I understand that any new business will be coming in via [the Introducer] and should come from a [the Introducer] e-mail account. That said, [the Introducer] are yet to be approved as introducers.
> …how are we progressing with [the Introducer] and the take on process?"

So, I think it's reasonable to conclude that the Introducer and Firm A were largely synonymous. They worked together to introduce customers to "alternative" unregulated investments and Mr C was the critical link between the two entities. I think Options knew this.

My view is therefore that any due diligence undertaken by Options on the Introducer before accepting introductions should have involved analysis of Firm A, including what Options already knew about Firm A.

Should Options have been concerned about Firm A?

Our service has decided a number of cases involving Firm A. I don't set out the findings of those decisions in detail, but in summary we have concluded (based on evidence we've seen) that:

- Options carried out a proforma based assessment on Firm A. It didn't do this at the start of its relationship with Firm A in 2011 – but it should have done so.

- In any event, once it had carried out the assessment if Options had acted reasonably and in a way that was consistent with its obligations in that role under the Principles and with good industry practice, it would not have accepted business from Firm A.

- Options knew that Firm A:

    - was a "distributor" of the Oasis - Salinas Sea investment.
    - was not authorised to give regulated investment advice.
    - apparently worked with regulated IFAs in some circumstances but not in all cases and that it would make direct introductions to Options on the basis that the client was acting on an execution only basis.
    - had mostly clients that could not reasonably be classified as high net worth or as sophisticated investors.
    - was receiving commission of around 8%.

- Options knew that Firm A purported to work with two regulated firms – Firm Y and Firm Z. Options did not explore this relationship further. But had it done so, it would have realised that these firms operated a "restricted advice" model.

  This was a model whereby the firms received introductions from unregulated introducers who typically promoted investments such as overseas property investments. The firms would then give advice on the suitability of switching an existing pension to a SIPP to make that investment. They did not give advice on the suitability of the investment. This type of restricted advice does not meet regulatory requirements.

  So Options knew or should have known that the business model Firm A was involved in lacked the safeguard of effective independent regulated advice. So the involvement of the IFAs with its business model ought to have been a red flag that should have given Options concerns.

- Options knew or should reasonably have known the Oasis – Salinas Sea investment was likely to be highly illiquid. It knew or should have known the investment was likely to be difficult to value and that it might well be difficult to sell when the member wanted to take benefits from their pension.

- Options knew or should have known that it is unlikely that an ordinary retail investor client would choose to transfer their personal pension to a SIPP without advice. And Options knew or should have known that it did not have a good understanding of the way Firm A operated and in particular how it found its clients.

- Options also knew that investing in an unregulated alternative investment that is high risk and speculative is unsuitable for most retail investors and that it is only likely to be suitable for high net worth or sophisticated investors on the basis that such an investment makes up only a small proportion of their portfolio.

- When Options agreed to accept business from Firm A it did not impose conditions on it such as for example only accepting such business where regulated advice had been given and/or only business involving high net worth or sophisticated investors, and/or only allowing a limited proportion of the SIPP fund to be invested in Oasis – Salinas Sea.

I've reviewed the evidence relating to Firm A and I agree with the findings summarised above.

So my view is that, taking all these points into account, Options knew or should have known when agreeing to accept introductions from Firm A there was a real risk of customer detriment. The fair and reasonable approach would have been to decline to accept business from Firm A.

What impact should this have had on Options accepting business from the Introducer?

Given the relationship between the Introducer and Firm A and what I've said above, I think the Options' assessment of the Introducer should have been that it would decline business from the Introducer too.

I think it would only have been fair and reasonable for Options to accept introductions if it was satisfied, based on additional evidence and safeguards, that the risks associated with Firm A had been comprehensively addressed.

However, having considered the available evidence, I'm not satisfied that this was the case.

My reasons are as follows:

- The introducer questionnaire showed that the investments promoted by the Introducer included Oasis- Salinas Sea but also other investments. All the investments were high risk, unregulated speculative overseas property-based investments that were likely to have liquidity issues. These would likely not be suitable for the vast majority of retail investors.

- The questionnaire showed that the Introducer's client base of customers with an average salary of £30,000-£50,000 were likely not sophisticated, experienced or high net worth. So it would be unlikely that the Introducer's client base was the kind of demographic for whom the investments promoted by the Introducer would be suitable and there was a real risk that they would suffer detriment through poor investment decisions.

- Options did not at any point explore with the Introducer what the "full product and process training" its agents had supposedly undertaken and how they had a "good knowledge of the traditional pensions market". So Options could not be satisfied that the Introducer's method of taking clients through a "process of educating them about alternative investments" could be undertaken without risk of the Introducer being involved in making investment recommendations.

- This risk was heightened as the Introducer stood to earn significant commissions of 7-9% from the investment companies. In other words, there was a risk of a hard sell and that the Introducer might stray into recommending or advising on investments.

- Options knew or should have known that it is unlikely that ordinary retail investor clients would choose to transfer their personal pension to a SIPP without advice.

- I've already highlighted above the issues relating to the regulated advice firms connected to Firm A. The meeting notes from 2012 suggest these same firms were connected to the Introducer. Furthermore, although another firm – Firm X - is mentioned in the questionnaire response from the Introducer, Options did not undertake any checks on that firm or its business model vis-à-vis the Introducer.

- The Introducer's business model did not require its clients to obtain regulated advice. And Options did not insist on this as a condition for accepting the Introducer introductions. None of the the Introducer cases I've reviewed involved a regulated adviser at the point of the pension transfers.

- The Introducer's response to the Options questionnaire set out that Mr X and Mr C called each consumer before each pension switch to make sure they'd been treated fairly and reasonably by their agents. But this was obviously not an adequate safeguard as it was not an independent process.

  I'm aware that Options contacted (by telephone) Mr H to ask templated questions about whether he understood the risks involved in the investments proposed and to confirm that the Introducer had not given him advice.

  I'm not satisfied that, in the circumstances here, that this measure by Options was adequate to manage the risk of consumer detriment. There was a risk that customers - who were already keen enough to undertake the paperwork for the pension switch - might be coached about how to respond to questions or not understand the implications of what they were being asked. For example, consumers may not realise that the giving of advice need not take the form of a formal written recommendation in order for the regulated activity of "giving advice" to have been undertaken.

  Overall, I think this telephone check had limited value in the context of the relationship with the Introducer as a whole.

- Even if the Introducer was not involved in advice, I think there was a clear and obvious risk that it was involved in another regulated activity – making arrangements for a personal pension.

  Under Article 25 of The Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 ("RAO") the following are regulated activities:

  > (1) Making arrangements for another person (whether as principal or agent) to buy, sell, subscribe for or underwrite a particular investment which is—
  > > (a) a security,

(b) a relevant investment, or
(c) an investment of the kind specified by article 86, or article 89 so far as relevant to that article, is a specified kind of activity.

(2) Making arrangements with a view to a person who participates in the arrangements buying, selling, subscribing for or underwriting investments falling within paragraph (1)(a), (b) or (c) (whether as principal or agent) is also a specified kind of activity.

There is an exclusion under Article 26 RAO of "arrangements which do not or would not bring about the transaction to which the arrangements relate".

Rights under a personal pension scheme are a security.

The 'call-centre' nature of the Introducer's business, that it was involved in obtaining pension information from existing pension providers and "pension reviews" and then submitting applications to Options on behalf of customers means that, even if it were not providing advice, the Introducer was likely arranging the pensions switches and investments.

I think the following parts of the Court of Appeal's judgement in the Adams case are of particular relevance here.

Paragraph 99:

"…..The fact remains that CLP "pre-completed the application form so that [Mr Adams] could just sign it" (to quote Mr Adams' witness statement). It also told Mr Adams of documents he would need to supply for anti-money laundering purposes and explained that the "completed forms and [his] anti money laundering documents will be collected by courier and taken to Carey Pensions UK". "Arrangements" being a "broad and untechnical word" in article 25 of the RAO as well as section 235 of FSMA, it is apt to describe what CLP did."

Paragraph 100

"I consider, too, that the steps which CLP took can fairly be said to have been such as to "bring about" the transfers from Friends Life and into the Carey SIPP. Contrary to the Judge's understanding, it does not matter that CLP's acts "did not necessarily result in any transaction between [Mr Adams] and [Carey]" or that "the process was out of CLP's hands to control in any event". Nor is it determinative whether steps can be termed "administrative".

CLP's "procuring the letter of authority", role in relation to anti-money laundering requirements and (especially) completion of the Carey application form were much more closely related to the relevant transactions than, say, the advertisement which originally prompted Mr Adams to contact CLP. It is to be remembered that CLP filled in sections of the application form dealing with "Personal Details", "Occupation & Eligibility", "Transfers", "Investments" and "Nomination Of Beneficiaries". In my view, what CLP did was thus significantly instrumental in the material transfers. In other words, there was, in my view, sufficient causal potency to satisfy the requirements of article 26 of the RAO."

> I'm satisfied that Options ought to have realised that, similar to Adams, the Introducer's business model meant that it might fairly be said to have been such as to "bring about" the switch from personal pensions into the Options SIPP and subsequent investments - they had sufficient causal potency to satisfy the requirements of Article 26 of the RAO.

What Options ought to have decided?

If Options had acted reasonably, in a way that was consistent with its role as a non-advisory SIPP operator, in a way that was consistent with its obligations in that role under the Principles and with good industry practice, it should have come to the conclusion not to accept introductions from the Introducer before Mr H's application.

Options knew or should have known when agreeing to accept introductions from the Introducer there was a real risk of customer detriment. All of the issues that it ought to have been aware of regarding Firm A were relevant for the Introducer and had not been mitigated or sufficiently addressed.

Options response to this was to require potential clients to sign declarations in its SIPP application and to call some consumers. In my view that was not a fair and reasonable approach bearing in mind the Principles for Businesses and good industry practice. In my view the fair and reasonable approach would have been to decline to accept business from the Introducer from the outset.

Asking Mr H to sign the declarations in his SIPP application and calling him with templated questions when it ought to have known that Mr H's dealings with the Introducer were putting him at significant risk of detriment was not the fair and reasonable thing to do. And it was not an effective way for Options to meet its regulatory obligations in the circumstances. It was not fair and reasonable to proceed on that basis.

So, for the above reasons, I think Mr H's complaint should be upheld.

Putting things right

My aim is to return Mr H to the position he would now be in but for what I consider to be Options due diligence failings.

Had Options acted fairly and reasonably it should have concluded that it should not accept Mr H's application to open a SIPP. I'm satisfied that would have been the end of this matter – it should have told Mr H that it could not accept the business. So if that had happened, the arrangement for Mr H with Options would not have come about.

The Options SIPP was opened in January 2014 and Mr H's personal pension was switched to the SIPP in February 2014. However no investments were made in the Options SIPP before Mr H switched his pension funds out of the Options SIPP to Guinness Mahon in around August 2014. And Mr H has received compensation from the FSCS in respect of the events that followed in the Guinness Mahon SIPP.

We haven't received anything to suggest Mr H's previous pension plan was anything other than a defined contribution plan without any guarantees attached.

Taking this all into consideration, in the particular circumstances of this case, I don't think it would be fair to say that Options is responsible for losses arising from investments that were made after monies were switched to Guinness Mahon. And so to address this, I think it is appropriate to cap Options' liability for losses arising from any funds switched to Options up to the date of the second switch to Guinness Mahon in August 2014.

Mr H has provided a reassignment of rights from the FSCS as a result of his claim regarding Guinness Mahon. I'm not sure why, but that reassignment document refers to Mr H being reassigned rights to pursue a claim against a SIPP business called Rowanmoor – not Options. But I've proceeded on the basis that although Mr H received compensation from the FSCS in relation to Guinness Mahon's actions, this was not a claim about losses caused by Options and did not compensate him for the initial pension switch to Options. I have therefore also proceeded on the basis that Mr H did not assign over his rights to bring this complaint against Options to the FSCS and that a reassignment of rights is not required.

In light of the above, I think that Options should calculate fair compensation as set out below. Options should:

1. Obtain the notional value, as at the date of the switch to the Guinness Mahon SIPP in August 2014, of Mr H's previous pension plan, if it hadn't been switched to the Options SIPP.

   Options must also ask the same operator to make a notional allowance in the calculations, so as to allow for any additional sums Mr H contributed to, or withdrew from, his Options SIPP. To be clear this doesn't include SIPP charges or fees paid to third parties like an adviser.

   Any notional contributions or notional withdrawals to be allowed for in the calculations should be deemed to have occurred on the date on which monies were actually credited to, or withdrawn from, the Options SIPP by Mr H.

   If there are any difficulties in obtaining a notional valuation from the operator of Mr H's previous pension plan, Options should instead calculate a notional valuation by ascertaining what the monies switched away from the previous pension would be worth, as at the date of the switch to the Guinness Mahon SIPP in around August 2014, had these achieved a return from the date of switch equivalent to the FTSE UK Private Investors Income Total Return Index (prior to 1 March 2017, the FTSE WMA Stock Market Income total return index).

   I'm satisfied that's a reasonable proxy for the type of return that could have been achieved over the period in question. And, again, there should be a notional allowance in this calculation for any additional sums Mr H contributed to, or withdrew from, his Options SIPP since the outset.

2. Obtain the actual value of Mr H's Options SIPP, as at the date of the switch to the Guinness Mahon SIPP in August 2014.

3. Deduct the sum arrived at in step 2. from the sum arrived at in step 1. That is the loss suffered by Mr H whilst his funds were held with Options.

4. The loss at 3. should then be updated by calculating what the sum would be worth had it achieved a return from the date of the switch to the Guinness Mahon SIPP in August 2014 to the date of this final decision equivalent to the return from the FTSE UK Private Investors Income Total Return Index (prior to 1 March 2017, the FTSE WMA Stock Market Income total return index). In this instance, I think this is the most practical and reasonable way of updating the loss.

5. Pay an amount into Mr H's SIPP, so that the transfer value of this is increased by an amount equal to the loss calculated at 3 and 4 above. This payment should take account of any available tax relief and the effect of charges. The payment should also take account of further interest as set out below.

   Compensation shouldn't be paid into a pension plan if it would conflict with any existing protections or allowances.

   If Options is unable to pay the compensation into Mr H's SIPP, or if doing so would give rise to protection or allowance issues, it should instead pay that amount direct to him. But had it been possible to pay into the plan, it would have provided a taxable income. Therefore, the compensation should be reduced to notionally allow for any income tax that would otherwise have been paid.

   The notional allowance should be calculated using Mr H's actual or expected marginal rate of tax in retirement at his selected retirement age.

   It's reasonable to assume that Mr H is likely to be a basic rate taxpayer at his selected retirement age, so the reduction would equal 20%. However, if Mr H would have been able to take a tax-free lump sum, the reduction should only be applied to that portion of the compensation that couldn't have been taken as a tax-free lump sum. For example, if Mr H would have been able to take a tax-free lump sum of 25%, the reduction should be applied to 75% of the compensation, resulting in an overall reduction of 15%.

I don't make an award for the distress caused to Mr H as I believe that any distress was more likely suffered as a result of the acts that took place in the Guinness Mahon SIPP.

Interest

The compensation resulting from this loss assessment must be paid to Mr H or into his SIPP within 28 days of the date Options receives notification of Mr H's acceptance of my final decision. Interest must be added to the compensation amount at the rate of 8% per year simple from the date of my final decision to the date of settlement if the compensation isn't paid within 28 days.

My final decision

For the reasons given above I uphold Mr H's complaint against Options UK Personal Pensions LLP. Options must pay Mr H compensation as set out above.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I'm required to ask Mr H to accept or reject my decision before 1 October 2024.
