Mr B says Abana Unipessoal Lda (Abana) gave him unsuitable advice about transferring his occupational pension funds into a Self-invested Personal Pension (SIPP) with unregulated investments, which caused him to suffer a financial loss.

background

Mr B had known Mr F for around 20 years. Mr F had been a mortgage adviser and Mr B had been happy with the advice he'd been given. They were on friendly terms, although Mr B says he would go years between seeing him. Mr F was a trusted source of financial advice.

Mr B had three pensions. He was a member of an occupational pension scheme (OPS) with BAE Systems. Over 15 years of service he'd accrued a fund with a transfer value of around £95,000. In 2012 he received advice from Mr F about how this could be put to better use. He recalls stipulating that he only wanted his funds to be invested in blue chip companies.

Mr B was advised to switch out of his BAE Systems plan and into a SIPP with Westerby Trustee Services Limited (Westerby). Its records for this transaction indicate that at the time Mr B was a client of the firm Joseph Oliver Mediacao de Seguros LDA (JOMSL) and that Mr F operated as an adviser on its behalf.

I set out the events of 2012 as background because they are relevant to points that have been made by both parties in relaying their understanding of events in this case. However, I won't be considering the switch of Mr B's BAE Systems pension plan in this decision. That's because it involves different regulated parties against which he's now brought separate complaints.

Mr B had also built up pension provisions with Capgemini during 17 years of service. One element of this was a defined benefits (DB) scheme, this had a total transfer value of around £244,000 and came with certain guarantees. In addition, Mr B had accumulated around £65,000 in a defined contribution plan also overseen by his employer.

Mr B again received advice from Mr F about his pension arrangements in early 2014. This time Mr F presented himself as being associated with Abana. I'll set out more fully the individuals and organisations involved in what happened to Mr B later in this decision.

Ultimately Mr B was persuaded to transfer his Capgemini pension, worth around £309,000 - which enjoyed valuable protections - into a SIPP with Avalon Investment Services Limited (Avalon). Mr F completed the paperwork in April 2014 and Mr B signed to give his agreement. Funds were transferred in June 2014.

Mr B took tax-free cash (TFC) of around £77,000. So, after allowing for a small cash balance to service the arrangement, the bulk of his residual pot of around £225,000 was invested through a business called ePortfolio Solutions. Initially monies appear to have been placed with the Brighton SPC - Kijani Commodity Fund (Kijani) and the Swiss Asset Micro Assist Inc Fund (SAMAIF).

The Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) engaged with Abana when it became aware the firm may have been operating in the UK outside of its permissions. At the relevant time, Abana was an EEA authorised firm and passported into the UK under the insurance mediation directive (IMD). However, it appeared to be providing services in the UK, namely giving advice and making arrangements in relation to pensions, without the top-up permissions it required from the FCA.

Abana has told us the FCA directed that an independent third party should review the advice the firm had given UK consumers to determine whether it had been suitable, and if it hadn't been to assess any detriment. Abana has said that a consultancy service specialising in regulatory compliance was appointed to carry out this review.

In October 2015, Mr B was asked by the independent consultancy to provide information about the events leading up to the transfer of his pension funds. It wrote to him again in February 2016 with its conclusions. It said the advice he'd been given to establish the SIPP and invest in unregulated funds had been unsuitable. It noted an agent of Abana – Mr F - had been responsible.

The consultancy set out what steps Abana should take to put Mr B back into the position he would've been in had the transfer not taken place. By the summer of 2016 Mr B still hadn't received compensation and so he complained to the businesses he thought were responsible.

None of the parties Mr B contacted accepted it was at fault for what had happened to him and so he brought his complaint to this Service in June 2017. He said that the advice he received amounted to mis-selling. And that the loss of his pension funds has caused him considerable hardship, forcing him to apply for income support.

Abana submits that Mr F who carried out the transaction with Mr B wasn't its appointed representative (AR), or its agent. So Abana says it's not responsible for the acts or omissions in this case and challenged our jurisdiction to consider Mr B's complaint against it.

The investigator concluded that we could look into Mr B's complaint. And after considering the merits of the case he went on to uphold it. Abana disagreed and so this case has been passed to me to consider. Before moving on, I'll deal with a few of the matters raised by Abana in responding to this Service at various points in time over the past few years.

Abana has said Avalon, as the SIPP provider, was regulated and allegedly accepted business introductions from an unregulated party and instructions to buy unregulated investments. It says Avalon had a responsibility to carry out due diligence.

Abana also questioned why Avalon agreed new terms of business with the entities New Beginnings Ltd and [Mr F] Associates, suggesting it was because the clients it's being held accountable to weren't meant to be added to its agency. It has suggested collusion between Mr F and that SIPP provider, resulting in the complaints it now faces.

Abana has said Avalon gave false information to the specialist compliance consultancy which was commissioned to look into the advice Abana had given various clients. It says that consultancy was negligent in how it conducted the reviews.

Abana cites a fund management company as having responsibility for the SIPP investments. And it questions actions taken by the FCA in 2015 which it says could've had a material impact on the losses of some complainants.

What Abana asserts may or may not be the case in relation to other regulated and unregulated firms and individuals. But I'm not considering a complaint against those parties here. Mr B has brought his complaint against Abana and that's what I need to address.

We can't 'join' third parties to a complaint to help shed light on what's happened in a case. Whilst we do have powers to require parties to a complaint to provide information to us, we can't compel anyone who isn't a party to the complaint to provide evidence.

Abana will be aware, a court does have powers to compel third parties to give evidence and to be cross examined. It's free to pursue other parties it feels may have been responsible to whatever degree for what's happened to Mr B and for exposing it to any claims and costs that it now faces. But that's not something this Service can help with.

Abana has also told us that in a meeting it held with Westerby and Mr F in May 2013, it was told some SIPP products were insurance based and therefore compliant under IMD permissions. It seems to be saying it was misled by other parties into thinking it could carry on the activities that are the subject of this complaint. Whatever the case, as a regulated firm it's responsible for its own regulatory compliance and its own acts and omissions.

Abana hasn't provided much information and evidence from the time of the events complained about. In relation to other cases it said recently that this Service hadn't asked it for information. I'm afraid that position isn't credible.

The cases I've seen have been ongoing now for many years. Abana has been asked for the information it holds in relation to these complaints. For example, the following is an extract from a letter this Service sent to it in August 2017 about Mr B's complaint:

"what you need to do now

So we can consider the complaint, we need you to send us:

- a copy of your files – including the fact find, key features and reasons why letter, if relevant (we will not be able to return your files while we investigate)
- the underwriting file (if applicable) with a copy of the relevant policy
- any brochures or promotional literature
- a full statement of the firm's case
- any other evidence you want us to take into account."

I'm satisfied Abana has had ample opportunity to make its case.

Abana has offered arguments in support of its position at various points over the past few years, and more recently in response to our investigators' opinions and some decisions this Service has already issued.

I've not provided a detailed response to all the arguments Abana has posed. That's deliberate; ours is an informal service for resolving disputes between financial businesses and their customers. And I won't be commenting further on decisions that have already been issued – those cases are now closed and Abana must adhere to any requirements placed on it.

While I've taken account and considered all Abana's submissions, I've concentrated my findings on what I think is relevant and at the heart of this complaint. That means the arguments Abana has made, including its most recent submissions to this Service on this case, where these are material to my consideration and the outcome reached, are addressed as appropriate in this decision.

So, I'll now turn to whether this Service has jurisdiction in this case concerning the transfer of Mr B's Capgemini OPS funds into a SIPP with Avalon and the unregulated investments made therein.

my findings

the parties involved in this case

Before I decide whether this Service has jurisdiction to consider Mr B's complaint against Abana, I thought it would be helpful to set out some of what we know about the parties who may have been involved in the transaction leading to this complaint.

There were several entities and individuals who could potentially have been involved, and the relationships between them aren't entirely clear. Some information is missing. Some firms no longer exist as a going concern. So, in this regard, and given the passage of time, the case is difficult to get to the bottom of.

However, we've been provided with some helpful documents by Avalon, the provider of Mr B's SIPP scheme. And these documents have been used to help us build a picture of the key relationships between the various parties.

Abana Unipessoal Lda

Abana is a Portuguese advisory firm that, at the relevant time, passported into the UK under the IMD on a branch passport. So, at the relevant time, it was an "EEA authorised" firm.

Abana's business model appears to have involved generating fees from advisors conducting activities in the UK. It has previously been attached to several firms and individuals (see tab "Appointed representatives / tied agents / PSD or EMD agents" under Abana's entry on the Financial Services Register (the Register)).

Mr F.

Mr F is a central figure in this complaint. As I'll set out later in this decision, it's Mr F who provided Mr B with advice about his Capgemini OPS and arranged for the funds to be transferred to the SIPP with Avalon (and to invest in the unregulated Kijani and SAMAI F funds). One of the matters I will need to establish is whether in conducting those activities, Mr F was acting on behalf of Abana (either as its AR or its agent).

Mr F isn't listed on the FCA register as an AR of Abana. However, this isn't a requirement under section 39(3) of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (FSMA), so it's not determinative of whether or not he was acting as Abana's AR. I will examine the relationship between Abana and Mr F in more detail below.

New Beginnings (Financial Solutions) Limited (New Beginnings)

New Beginnings was listed on the FCA register as an AR of Abana from 11 March 2014 until 6 February 2015. Mr F was a minority shareholder of this firm.

We've been provided with a copy of the AR agreement between Abana and New Beginnings which is dated 7 March 2014. The recitals of the agreement set out the following:

WHEREAS:

- (1) The Company [Abana] is in the business of international wealth management, life assurance and general insurance mediation and is authorised and regulated by the Instituto de Seguros de Portugal ("ISP") with registration number 412378472. The Company has established a branch in England with company registration FC031241 with limited regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority ("FCA") number 597069 and authorised by the DGSFP In Spain.
- (2) The Company hereby appoints the AR [New Beginnings] as its appointed representative, subject to the terms of this agreement whereby the Company shall authorise and the AR shall conduct the Activities defined herein.

The definition section of the agreement sets out:

"Activities" means the activities for which the Company is authorised, as agreed between the parties as detailed in the Schedule hereto (as amended from time to time);

"AR" means the AR (as set out above) and any employee, officer or agent or any person or persons acting in conjunction with or appointed by or under the control of the AR and any person or persons connected with the AR

We were not provided with a copy of the Schedule referred to in the agreement.

[Mr F] Associates

[Mr F] Associates isn't a legal entity or company in its own right. It appears to be a trading name Mr F began using for activities he was carrying out from a certain point in time.

Mr F told Avalon that he was in the process of getting his own FCA authorisation (he had previously been submitting business to Avalon using Abana's authorisation number). He made an application for new terms of business on 28 May 2014 and this was acknowledged by Avalon, which at that point noted internally his intention to leave Abana.

In June 2014 Mr F and Avalon were trying to finalise the arrangements for Mr F to be submitting business to them on his own account. For example, the parties discussed ensuring appropriate letters of authority for Mr F's clients were in place and were in the process of agreeing when payments to his "new agency" would be effective from.

Mr F's FCA authorisation hadn't been received by July 2014, so he agreed with Avalon that in the interim, business would be conducted through New Beginnings, with [Mr F] Associates acting as part of that network.

Avalon Investment Services Limited

Avalon was a UK based SIPP provider and administrator, regulated by the FCA. Amongst other activities, it was authorised to arrange deals in investments and to establish, operate and wind up a pension scheme.

An Avalon SIPP was used to make the unregulated investments that Mr B is unhappy about.

Avalon was placed into administration in February 2016 and was dissolved in August 2018. The Financial Services Compensation Scheme (FSCS) is currently considering claims against the firm (see <https://www.fscs.org.uk/failed-firms/avalon/>).

can our Service consider Mr B's complaint against Abana?

the jurisdiction of the ombudsman service

The ombudsman service can consider a complaint under our compulsory jurisdiction if it relates to an act or omission by a "firm" in the carrying on of one or more listed activities, including regulated activities (DISP 2.3.1 R). A "firm" includes an incoming EEA firm. Abana was, at the relevant time, an incoming EEA firm.

DISP 2.3.3 G provides further guidance on what acts or omissions can be considered as a complaint and sets out that (bolding is my emphasis):

"complaints about acts or omissions include those in respect of activities for which the firm ... is responsible (including business of any appointed representative or agent for which the firm ... has accepted responsibility)".

So, there are two questions to be determined before I can decide whether this complaint can be considered under the compulsory jurisdiction of this service:

1. Were the acts about which Mr B complains done in the carrying on of a regulated activity?
2. Was the principal firm, Abana responsible for those acts?

were the acts Mr B complained about done in carrying on a regulated activity?

Mr B has complained about Abana's role in him receiving unsuitable pension and investment advice. And the subsequent arrangements made on his behalf to transfer his Capgemini OPS funds to a SIPP with Avalon and make investments in the Kijani and SAMAIF funds.

Section 22 of FSMA defines "regulated activities" as follows:

"(1) An activity is a regulated activity for the purposes of this Act if it is an activity of a specified kind which is carried on by way of business and—

(a) relates to an investment of a specified kind;...

(4) "Investment" includes any asset, right or interest.

(5) "Specified" means specified in an order made by the Treasury."

The relevant Treasury order is the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (RAO). Article 4 provides:

"4. – Specified activities: general

(1) The following provisions of this Part specify kinds of activity for the purposes of section 22(1) of the Act (and accordingly any activity of one of those kinds, which is carried on by way of business and relates to an investment of a kind specified by any provision of Part III and applicable to that activity, is regulated activity for the purposes of the Act)."

Article 82 of the RAO provides that rights under a personal pension scheme are a specified investment. A SIPP is a personal pension scheme. So, giving advice about a SIPP is a regulated activity. Abana has provided an interpretation of an exchange it had with the FCA in 2015 as an argument why the activity it was involved in wasn't regulated. I'll provide my thoughts on its argument later in this decision.

We've not been provided with much of the paperwork you would expect to accompany such a significant transaction – although we do have testimony from Mr B about Mr F's involvement in providing him with advice.

Nevertheless, I think it's highly unlikely Mr B would've embarked on a high-risk investment strategy using his Capgemini pension provisions without this course of action being recommended to him. He'd built up his funds over many years. It seems more likely than not he received advice that motivated him to make the transfer.

I'm satisfied Mr F gave advice to Mr B to transfer his personal pension plans and invest through a SIPP with Avalon. I understand Mr F told Mr B that the unregulated investments would perform better than his existing pensions. I think Mr B trusted the assurances he got about the safety of the funds, which is why he was persuaded to make the transfer.

In addition, under Article 25(1) RAO, making arrangements for another person to buy and sell a specified investment is a regulated activity. And Article 25(2) RAO says making arrangements with a view to a person who participates in the arrangements for buying and selling these types of investments is also a regulated activity.

The FCA's Perimeter Guidance Manual (PERG) says the following about Article 25(1):

"The activity of arranging (bringing about) deals in investments is aimed at arrangements that would have the direct effect that a particular transaction is concluded (that is, arrangements that bring it about)."

It then says the following about Article 25(2):

"The activity of making arrangements with a view to transactions in investments is concerned with arrangements of an ongoing nature whose purpose is to facilitate the entering into of transactions by other parties. This activity has a potentially broad scope and typically applies in one of two scenarios. These are where a person provides arrangements of some kind:

(1) to enable or assist investors to deal with or through a particular firm (such as the arrangements made by introducers); or

(2) to facilitate the entering into of transactions directly by the parties... (such as multilateral trading facilities of any kind ...exchanges, clearing houses and service companies (for example, persons who provide communication facilities for the routing of orders or the negotiation of transactions))."

Mr F's details, including his signature were included on Mr B's ePortfolio Solutions application. And both this and his SIPP documentation had Abana's details on. He transmitted the applications and Avalon dealt with him as the key contact. Mr F led it to believe that he was introducing business with Abana's authority.

PERG 12.3 makes it clear that the circumstances in which rights under a personal pension scheme may be bought or sold include when the member first joins the scheme and acquires all the rights that the scheme provides to its members (since he has bought those rights).

Mr F transmitted the authorised paperwork to Avalon which facilitated Mr B opening the SIPP and the investment in the unregulated funds. I'm satisfied that this constitutes the regulated activity of arranging the pension scheme with Avalon. And, I'm satisfied that the actions of Mr F constitute making arrangements for another person to buy and sell a specified investment under Article 25(1) of the RAO.

Abana says it's taken advice about the regulations. It asserts that it can rely on certain exclusions in the RAO (which, if applicable, would bring the activities outside the scope of Article 25). For example, it says that the exclusion at Article 29 applies because Mr F was an unauthorised arranger. As I'll set out later in this decision, I'm satisfied Mr F was acting as an agent of Abana. So, Abana is the authorised person here. And it's arguments are not telling.

Abana also refers to the exclusion set out at article 33 and says that an independent fund manager was appointed to manage the assets of the SIPP. Asset Management International (AMI) was a non-regulated fund management organisation that was associated with ePortfolio Solutions.

But I've seen no evidence that Mr F, Avalon or anyone else were introducing Mr B to an appropriate party under the provision it references. I think, Mr F on behalf of Abana, made the introduction to Avalon as an authorised person. But this wasn't for the purpose for it to provide independent advice or the independent exercise of discretion in relation to investments generally or in relation to any class of investments to which the arrangements relate. So, the exclusion at article 33 doesn't apply.

I'm satisfied that this complaint involves regulated activities – giving advice on transferring from OPS pension arrangements to a SIPP with Avalon and investing in unregulated funds and making arrangements to give effect to these matters.

was Abana responsible for the acts and omissions of Mr F?

The next thing I must consider is whether Abana is responsible for the acts and omissions of Mr F. As mentioned above, the guidance at DISP 2.3.3G says (bolding is my emphasis):

"complaints about acts or omissions include those in respect of activities for which the firm...is responsible (including business of any appointed representative or agent for which the firm...has accepted responsibility)".

Appointed representatives

Section 39 FSMA sets out the following:

“Exemption of appointed representatives.

(1) If a person (other than an authorised person)–

(a) is a party to a contract with an authorised person (“his principal”) which–

- (i) permits or requires him to carry on business of a prescribed description, and*
- (ii) complies with such requirements as may be prescribed, and*

(b) is someone for whose activities in carrying on the whole or part of that business his principal has accepted responsibility in writing, he is exempt from the general prohibition in relation to any regulated activity comprised in the carrying on of that business for which his principal has accepted responsibility.

(2) In this Act “appointed representative” means—

(a) a person who is exempt as a result of subsection (1)

(3) The principal of an appointed representative is responsible, to the same extent as if he had expressly permitted it, for anything done or omitted by the representative in carrying on the business for which he has accepted responsibility.

(4) In determining whether an authorised person has complied with—

(a) a provision contained in or made under this Act, ... anything which a relevant person has done or omitted as respects business for which the authorised person has accepted responsibility is to be treated as having been done or omitted by the authorised person.

(5) “Relevant person” means a person who at the material time is or was an appointed representative by virtue of being a party to a contract with the authorised person.”

So, a firm is answerable for complaints about the acts or omissions of its AR in relation to the business it has accepted responsibility for in writing. I therefore need to determine whether Abana had accepted responsibility - in writing - for the acts being complained about here i.e. the advice given and the arrangements made by Mr F.

The law of agency

As set out above, a firm may also be responsible for the acts or omissions of its agents (DISP 2.3.3G). So in the alternative, I will need to consider whether Mr F was acting as Abana’s agent in relation to the acts complained about, and whether it is therefore responsible for Mr B’s complaint on that basis.

Agency is where one party (the principal) allows another party (the agent) to act on its behalf in such a way that affects its legal relationship with third parties. Broadly speaking, there are two types of agency I will need to consider: (1) actual authority, either express or implied, and (2) apparent (also called ostensible) authority.

The textbook Bowstead & Reynolds on Agency \(21st Ed\) sets out the following about actual authority [chapter 3, article 22]:

“Actual authority

Actual authority is the authority which the principal has given the agent wholly or in part by means of words or writing (called here express authority) or is regarded by the law as having given him because of the interpretation put by the law on the relationship and dealings of the two parties. Although founded in the principal’s assent, the conferral of authority is judged objectively”.

Diplock LJ said in Freeman & Lockyer v Buckhurst Properties (Mangal) Ltd (1964) 2 QB 480 [at paragraph 502]:

“An ‘actual’ authority is a legal relationship between principal and agent created by a consensual agreement to which they alone are parties. Its scope is to be ascertained by applying ordinary principles of construction of contracts, including any proper implications from the express words used, the usages of the trade, or the course of business between the parties. To this agreement the contractor is a stranger: he may be totally ignorant of the existence of any authority on the part of the agent. Nevertheless, if the agent does enter into a contract pursuant to the ‘actual’ authority, it does create contractual rights and liabilities between the principal and the contractor.”

So, actual authority is a legal relationship between the principal and agent created by an agreement to which they alone are parties. It may be express, for example a written contract or oral agreement. Or it can be implied, where the authority can be concluded from the conduct of the parties or the circumstances of the case that consent has been given for certain acts to be carried out by the agent on behalf of the principal.

And Bowstead & Reynolds sets out the following about apparent authority [chapter 8, article 72]:

“Apparent (or Ostensible) Authority

Where a person, by words or conduct, represents or permits it to be represented that another person has authority to act on his behalf, he is bound by the acts of that other person with respect to anyone dealing with him as an agent on the faith of any such representation, to the same extent as if such other person had the authority that he was represented to have, even though he had no such actual authority.”

For apparent authority to operate, there must be a representation by the principal that the agent has its authority to act. As Diplock LJ said in Freeman & Lockyer v Buckhurst Properties (Mangal) Ltd (1964) 2 QB 480:

“The representation which creates “apparent” authority may take a variety of forms of which the commonest is representation by conduct, that is, by permitting the agent to act in some way in the conduct of the principal’s business with other persons. By so doing the principal represents to anyone who becomes aware that the agent is so acting that the agent has authority to enter on behalf of the principal into contracts with other persons of the kind which an agent so acting in the conduct of his principal’s business has usually “actual” authority to enter into”.

So, the question I must consider here is whether Abana (as principal) allowed Mr F (the agent) to act on its behalf in relation to conducting the activities Mr B has complained about. And whether this was done with the express or implied agreement of Abana (actual authority), or whether the evidence shows Mr B relied on a representation made by Abana (or that Abana allowed to be made) that Mr F had its authority to carry out the acts complained about.

The advice given and the arrangements made by Mr F.

The first thing I need to consider is whether Mr F's dealings with Mr B were either (1) in his capacity as an AR or agent of Abana, (2) in his own unregulated capacity (i.e. as [Mr F] Associates, or (3) as part of the New Beginnings "Network".

The advice given and the arrangements made for the transfer of Mr B's Capgemini OPS funds, including the authorisation and transmission of his documentation for a SIPP with Avalon and his application to ePortfolio Solutions, and effecting the investment in unregulated funds, were dealt with by Mr F. Avalon relied on the authority it understood him to have in these matters.

So, having reviewed the evidence, I think the advice and arrangements in Mr B's introduction to Avalon were conducted by Mr F on behalf of Abana because:

- The main elements of the transaction happened in April 2014 – this is before he told Avalon he was leaving Abana and provided new terms of business for it at the end of May 2014. Before this Mr F had been submitting business to SIPP providers in his capacity as an agent of Abana and using its authorisation details.
- Further, Mr B's application paperwork required identification of the financial adviser firm, Mr F filled this in with "Abana Lda". And he provided its FCA reference number on the associated documents. Mr F signed to this effect as required, including other paperwork for example to confirm Mr B's identity.
- Mr B's testimony is that Mr F gave him advice and that he'd been told by him that he was working on behalf of Abana.

Given what I've seen in this complaint and in other similar cases, I'm satisfied Mr F advised on and arranged Mr B's SIPP with Avalon while he was still an agent of Abana (and not in his capacity as an unregulated introducer when he was purporting to seek direct authorisation for [Mr F] Associates, or as part of the New Beginnings Network). From the documentation I've seen, I'm also satisfied he wasn't representing JOMSL in this instance.

did Abana accept responsibility for this advice and arrangements under section 39(3) FSMA?

I now need to consider whether Mr F did in fact have authority to act on behalf of Abana in advising on and arranging Mr B's SIPP with Avalon and the investment in unregulated funds. We've been provided with an agreement between Abana and Mr F which purports to be an AR agreement. This was provided by Abana when we first became involved in these cases in February 2016. The agreement states the following:

"THIS AGREEMENT is made this 1st day of May 2013

BETWEEN:

(1) ABANA Lda, a company registered in Portugal under number 510205410...("the Company"); and

(2) [Mr F] (a person) of [specified address] ("the Appointed Representative or AR").

WHEREAS:

(1) The Company is in the business of international wealth management, life assurance and general insurance mediation and is authorised and regulated by the Institute de Seguros de Portugal ("ISP") with registration number 412378472. The Company is authorised to conduct business in the UK under the regime of free provision of services within the European Union and has been authorised as such by ISP and the Financial Services Authority ("FSA") with FSA registration number 597069.

(2) The Company hereby appoints the AR as its appointed representative, subject to the terms of this agreement whereby the Company shall authorise and the AR shall conduct the various activities defined herein."

The definition section of the agreement sets out:

"Activities" means the activities agreed and discussed between the parties on execution of this agreement, as amended from time to time, which the parties may further clarify in an annex hereto, in default of which such activities shall include activities defined in FSA Regulations as insurance mediation activities and designated life assurance business;

"AR" means the AR (as set out above) and any employee, officer or agent or any person or persons acting in conjunction with or appointed by or under the control of the AR and any person or persons connected with the AR"

We weren't provided with a copy of the annex referred to in the agreement, but I note that in default the agreement shall include "activities defined in FSA Regulations as insurance mediation activities and designated life assurance business", so I've taken this into consideration.

The agreement is signed by both parties.

The arrangements made in connection with the SIPP and the underlying investments for Mr B didn't constitute insurance mediation activities or life assurance business – both of which relate to contracts of insurance. So, based on the evidence I've seen, I'm satisfied the terms of the AR agreement didn't authorise Mr F to conduct the arrangements that he carried out for him.

As such, I conclude Abana didn't accept responsibility in writing under the statutory regime of section 39 (3) FSMA for Mr F to arrange this transaction in his capacity as an AR of Abana. And, so it isn't responsible for the acts of Mr F in this case on the basis of section 39 FSMA.

In its response to this Service, Abana suggests the AR agreement is a fraud. It noted the font on the final signed page was different from the rest of the document. It says the agreement we've relied on didn't have Mr F's original (wet) signature on it. It says the agreement wasn't enforceable because it didn't have all the elements required to be a valid contract. And that because it was void, it wasn't submitted to the FCA register and therefore Mr F didn't become a regulated AR of Abana.

I've carefully considered Abana's submission. I can see that the last page of the copy of the agreement – which contains the signatures of the parties - is in a different font from the rest of the document. And as I've already acknowledged Mr F was never listed on the FCA register as an AR of Abana.

However, I'd note it was Abana which provided the copy of the agreement to us that it now asserts is a fraud. In an email to this Service in 2016, responding to an enquiry about Mr F's role with Abana, it told us "We have not been able to locate a written agreement with [Mr F] as an individual". To this it attached the agreement. Later it explained it had meant it couldn't find a document with his original signature.

In a recent submission, Abana said that when it spoke to one of our adjudicator's in February 2016, it made clear it could only locate a copy of a terminated AR agreement and that he asked for it to be forwarded anyway.

Abana seems to be acknowledging here that there was an agreement, but that it was terminated. In any case, while I can't find a recording of the conversation between it and the adjudicator in February 2016, I've seen an exchange of emails during that month between Abana's Director and the adjudicator. At no point was a terminated AR agreement mentioned. The exchange was focussed on understanding the nature of the relationship between it and Mr F.

I don't find Abana's arguments persuasive. When it first sent the AR agreement to us, it made no comment on its veracity or that what it was forwarding to us was a fraud. And it didn't say the document hadn't been signed by the parties. I would've expected Abana to have provided this important commentary at the time, not four years later.

I'm satisfied that the AR agreement I've seen is genuine and indicative of the relationship between Abana and Mr F. My conclusion is bolstered by what Abana has told us about its connection with him; and the emails I've seen between Abana and Mr F, and between Abana and SIPP providers which I set out in more detail below.

I'll now go on to consider whether Abana may have given Mr F authority to conduct pensions business on its behalf under common law principles of agency. This, as previously set out, is provided for under DISP 2.3.3 G.

was Abana responsible for the arrangements made by Mr F acting as its agent?

In analysing whether there was an agency arrangement I need to understand what was contracted between the parties in order to determine whether or not the relevant activities Mr F carried out were within the scope of what had been authorised and agreed to by Abana (i.e. had Abana given its actual authority for Mr F to carry on those activities on its behalf?).

In addition to the AR agreement, there are several other batches of evidence that are important to my consideration here.

the pension activities and arrangements Mr F was undertaking

Abana's told us that it knew that Mr F was involved with pension activities when it entered into a relationship with him. In 2016 it told us:

"The relationship was that [Mr F] was a qualified IFA with a client base that he had built up while he worked for [JOMSL] with Westerby products. These clients were transferred to Abana and he would continue to assist those clients. Abana obtained a [sic] agency with Westerby and provided a home for his clients. [Mr F] paid us £5880 annually for this temporary service as he said he was going to be directly authorised. This agreement was superseded when [Mr F] introduced New Beginnings Ltd who became an appointed representative of Abana."

Abana says this arrangement, which it still acknowledges, was for a fixed-fee for the caretaking of an existing client base for a temporary period. It said the arrangement didn't confer any authority to Mr F.

I think it demonstrates that Abana expected Mr F to carry on pensions activities and facilitated this by entering into an agency agreement with Westerby. Further, there's a pattern of contemporaneous evidence which bolsters my finding that Abana knew Mr F had a significant and ongoing involvement in pension activities, acting on its behalf.

For example, I've seen a letter from Abana to Westerby dated 17 May 2013 about the transfer of clients from JOMSL. It requests that these clients are held in a new sub-agency for identification purposes and directs that all commission payments under this sub-agency be paid to a particular account. That account was in the name of Mr F.

As I've already set out, Mr B was persuaded by Mr F - when he was said to be working for JOSML - to switch his BAE Systems pension into a Westerby SIPP in 2012. And it appears he was one of the clients who was subject to the agreement which saw clients move from JOMSL to Abana's books.

Subsequent advice provided and the arrangements made by Mr F - on this occasion when he was associated with Abana - to transfer Mr B's Capgemini OPS to an Avalon SIPP happened in April 2014. This was well after the transfer of clients had happened.

There's an interesting email exchange in early March 2014 in which Westerby requests an urgent meeting with Abana. It writes:

"I need to get our meeting in the diary. We have a number of questions to ask which really are just for us to get a better understanding of Abana, where you get your leads from and the way you implement your compliance and oversight. We now have a fair number of cases introduced by [Mr F] and we just need to monitor the relationship."

And Abana responds:

"We have tried to coordinate a meeting with Mr F but he is leaving on two weeks holiday from Friday and is fully booked...we understand [Mr F's] clients are from referrals. All case fact finds and notes are uploaded to our secure client portal to be reviewed by our compliance and available to the client..."

Abana says this communication related to business Mr F transferred from JOMSL. I think the exchange shows the SIPP provider understood the relationship to be that Mr F was working on behalf of Abana and it was attributing the business Mr F was submitting to it as being business done on behalf of Abana as principal.

Furthermore, I think it shows Abana was aware of the significant number of pension business introductions Mr F was making on its behalf. And that it tried to give the SIPP provider assurances about the records it was keeping for all the clients (fact finds and notes) and the compliance arrangements it had in place to check things were being done correctly.

Interestingly, there's correspondence between Abana and Mr F in April 2014 – around the time he was giving Mr B advice about and making arrangements for the transfer of his Capgemini OPS - about the nature of the services he was providing.

Abana says this appears to be in relation to a suitability report of an existing transferred SIPP. Its Director says this was a personal email, and Mr F appears to want feedback because he may've provided similar opinions for Mr F when he worked at JOMSL.

In the email Abana's Director tells Mr F (my emphasis):

"I've had compliance read through the SL report and here are their comments re investment. I should add that we should tell the clients we are not regulated to give advice on funds and they should seek further assistance if they do not want to do it themselves. Let me know what you suggest please?"

This doesn't seem to me to be a personal exchange. And I don't find Abana's explanation to be credible. I think the email is reflective of Abana giving Mr F guidance on how he should be constructing the suitability reports for what were effectively its clients, following a review by its compliance team. It's quite directive in tone and suggestive of a principal / agent relationship.

The advice from Abana's compliance function to Mr F focused on investment funds. There was no similar concern expressed about the pension advice or arrangements Mr F was making. Otherwise, I would've expected this to have been made clear as well.

I think taken together, this package of evidence demonstrates the following:

- The written agreement between Abana and Mr F shows that there was a relationship between the parties under which they anticipated that Mr F would carry out certain activities on behalf of Abana.

- Unlike the requirements of section 39 FSMA, Abana and Mr F could agree in a more informal way that Mr F had authority to conduct pensions business on behalf of Abana, such as through the dealings between the parties. I'm satisfied based on the evidence that Abana was aware of, and consented to, Mr F carrying on these pension activities on its behalf and that consensual agreement to conduct these activities can be gleaned from the dealings between the parties.
- Mr F was not directly authorised by the FCA. The communications between Abana and Mr F that I have set out above show that Abana entered into a relationship with Mr F so that he could continue to provide advice to clients on the basis of Abana's authorisation (they would become Abana's clients who Mr F would continue to assist). And it shows that Abana knew Mr F was providing advice to consumers to open SIPP's, in fact it entered into terms of business with a SIPP operator so that Mr F could provide the same for clients.

Further, Abana has said that in a meeting it held with Westerby and Mr F in May 2013, it was told some SIPP products were insurance based and therefore compliant under IMD permissions. It seems probable it didn't properly understand the business it was becoming involved with.

In June 2015 it sent some of its clients a letter which I think is very telling, it begins:

"...IMPORTANT: Advice given to you by Abana Lda ("Abana") in relation to your SIPP with Westerby Trustee Services Limited...Why are we writing to you?"

I am writing to you with reference to the advice you received by your former advisor [Mr F] ...concerning your investments held with Asset Management International (AMI) under your [SIPP]. It has recently come to our attention that Abana were not authorised to give the advice we gave to you regarding your investments as we do not have the correct regulatory permissions..."

Whether Abana was or wasn't misled by other parties into thinking it could carry on the activities that are the subject of Mr B's complaint, the fact as acknowledged in this letter is that it was responsible for its own regulatory compliance and its own acts and omissions in that regard.

So, I'm satisfied that Mr F did have Abana's actual authority to undertake pension activities, including arranging SIPP's, on its behalf.

payment of adviser charges made by SIPP providers for business generated by Mr F

I've already mentioned a letter I've seen from Abana to Westerby dated 17 May 2013 about the transfer of clients from another advisory firm. It directs that all commission payments under its sub-agency be paid to a particular account in the name of Mr F. Abana sent a further letter to Westerby in November 2013 confirming bank account details for its ARs and sub-agents, in which Mr F's bank account details were updated.

Abana says it's never received any fees for the advice Mr B received from Mr F and it points to this as proof that he wasn't its client. I can see from the paperwork he wasn't charged an upfront fee for the advice he received in 2014. The ePortfolio application confirms this, but that also indicates that he'd be paying an ongoing management or 'trail' fee worth 1% of the value of his fund. Presumably this was paid by the SIPP provider into one of the accounts it had been notified of by Abana.

As an aside, we were also told by Avalon, about payments made to Abana for business introduced by Mr F before the end of May 2014. I've seen statements to this effect where Abana is shown as the introducer and the total payment (which included charges for multiple clients) was due to it. But unfortunately, it's not that straightforward.

I can also see that from April 2014 Mr F was liaising with Avalon to clarify what commission payments were being made – they appeared to be coming through as a lump sum and he couldn't work out how the payments related to different clients.

Mr F asked Avalon for more information about the transactions. He said the payment side was done from Portugal (where the main Abana group is based), so it was important for him to get a better breakdown of what the payments represented. Avalon appears to have acted on his request to ensure he received a copy of future commission statements to his own business address.

Communications between Mr F and Avalon continued through May and June 2014 and increasingly became about remuneration arrangements following his planned establishment of [Mr F] Associates. And then when this didn't work out, there were discussions about channelling payments to the New Beginnings network. It was agreed that fees would go direct to him in future, subject to certain conditions being met.

The position gets muddled for several reasons. Avalon started withholding some commission payments to Abana, giving Mr F an opportunity to get his clients to sign letters of authority (LOA) to transfer oversight of their SIPP affairs from Abana to his new agency.

It's clear getting the LOAs in place was problematic. And this may shed light on Abana's testimony in a number of the cases we're looking at when it says it didn't receive payments from Avalon in respect of certain transactions. I think the following email from Avalon to Mr F from September 2014 is instructive:

"We are being chased by Abana to supply them with details of adviser charges paid in the last quarter. As you know we have held back payments to them pending receipt of LOA from you for 13 clients but we are now being put in a difficult position with regards to payment on these. Can I have your thoughts. We will have little choice other than to make payment to them if we can't have the LOA's in the very near future."

I've thought carefully about what all this means. Consistent with what I've set-out elsewhere, I think the information supports my finding that Mr F was acting on behalf of Abana until the end of May 2014, even though he appears to be hatching plans to work on his own account prior to this. I think Abana was expecting payments to flow back to it for this business, as it had done with other transactions, and when it didn't it queried the position with Avalon.

Although I don't know what payments Abana ultimately received for the reasons I've set out, I do think the evidence here demonstrates that Mr F was given actual authority to undertake pension activities on behalf of Abana. And that working on behalf of Abana would've expected to have received payment for the services he provided.

the independent review of pension transactions attributed to Abana

Abana acknowledged the outcome of an independent review into several cases that have been dealt with by this Service. The reviews concluded Mr F had been responsible for unsuitable advice he gave and the arrangements he made for the transfer of pension funds into SIPPs, and therein the investment in unregulated funds.

In order to pay the redress due, Abana made a claim on its professional indemnity insurance. So, this was another example we have that for some time it accepted responsibility for the things Mr F had done wrong.

Abana ultimately changed its position. It says its initial notification to clients of the things that it had got wrong and the subsequent offer to pay redress wasn't an admission of liability. It says it felt under an obligation following the FCA's intervention. It said the review work conducted by the regulatory compliance consultancy was flawed. It makes various allegations, including that the review relied on incomplete and false information from by SIPP providers.

I've thought about what Abana has said here. I don't find its arguments convincing. If the review work was fatally flawed, then I'm surprised it made a claim to its insurers on that basis. And it hasn't provided any evidence of its assertions.

Actually, from what I've seen I think it's likely Abana's later repositioning here had more to do with its professional indemnity insurer rejecting its claim to cover the compensation costs. I note in December 2017 it wrote to the FCA in the following terms:

"Since the FCA is of the opinion that...our PI insurers, will not be able to cover any redress by virtue of the fact that [Mr F] was acting outside the remit of regulated activity, the victims are thus left in the unfortunate and unfair position of not being able to receive any redress whatsoever."

In respect of Mr B's case specifically, Abana has said his details were included in the review by mistake after Avalon incorrectly added him to the list of cases to be reviewed by the specialist consultancy. It says Mr B was offered redress he wasn't entitled to. But it hasn't provided material evidence to support its assertions here. And I've not seen anything which makes me think what happened to Mr B shouldn't have been included in the review.

Ensuring its agents were only given authority to operate within the scope of its own permissions was Abana's responsibility. As I've already set out, it was aware of what activities Mr F was undertaking. Even if it didn't realise what he was doing would have the effect of nullifying or being beyond its insurance cover because his activities fell outside the scope of Abana's permissions, it should've done.

So, I think Abana notifying its clients that something had gone wrong, the review process it engaged with and its initial acceptance of the redress proposals is significant and is another indication that it had in fact given Mr F authority to act on its behalf in arranging SIPPs, such as Mr B's.

Abana's website

Abana's website around the time of the events complained about appears to have shown Mr F listed as a "pensions/financial adviser" and part of "The Abana Team". It includes a photo of an individual that purports to be him. We obtained this information from an online resource. Mr F's details remained on the Abana website until at least December 2014.

Abana disputed these matters. For example, it says the historic website pages referenced were draft. It says Mr F's description is incomplete and this shows he didn't make it onto the Abana team. It told us the supposed photo of Mr F wasn't him.

Abana's argument here has some merit. I've checked and the image that appeared on its website wasn't Mr F. And I don't know whether Mr F's details were published externally or as Abana suggests the pages were just draft.

However, in the context of everything else I've seen, I find the fact the web pages exist at all is in itself significant and more likely than not reflective of a close association between the parties. And it therefore bolsters the evidence that Mr F was acting with Abana's actual authority in conducting pensions activities such as arranging SIPPs.

Abana's engagement with the FCA in 2015

In responding to some earlier decisions which have been upheld against it, Abana questioned the jurisdiction of this Service citing communications it had previously with the FCA on this matter. I can see that Abana's Director sought advice from the FCA on 2 February 2015. His email was as follows:

"Dear X, regarding FCA authorised firm 597069 Abana Lda. Thank you for advising me earlier of the rule book regarding SIPP advice I have read the following chapters that you referred me to...May we ask the following questions:1. Can we advise UK residents on SIPPs under our inward passported UK branch IMD permissions?..."

I can see the FCA responded on 16 March 2015 saying (bolding my emphasis):

"In respect of your question as to whether you can advise UK residents on SIPPs under an inward UK branch IMD passport. We understand that by UK residents you mean potential members or actual members of SIPPS. These types of schemes are set up under a trust arrangement whereby the member is a beneficiary of the trust and the benefits to which they are entitled will be secured through the rights under the insurance policy being held by the trustee. Normally the trustee operates/holds a separate scheme and insurance contract for each member. On that basis the IMD passport would not be sufficient and you would be required to seek a top-up permission."

"This is because arranging to obtain rights under an existing policy is not IMD business and to be precise the member would be entering into a trust relationship not an insurance contract. Additionally, the IMD would not generally apply to post conclusion activities such as arranging deals in and advising on subsequent transactions...So the IMD would not extend to advice within the pension (e.g. investment decisions on where to invest), transfers of benefits to or from the pension and advising on and arranging the taking of benefits."

This is consistent with my findings elsewhere in this decision.

Rather than supporting its position on jurisdiction, I think this exchange of emails in February and March 2015 is revealing that even at this time Abana still didn't know until it received FCA's advice whether or not it had permission to provide the services it had been up until that point.

Taking all these matters together with the other information I've already set-out in this decision, there's a substantial weight of evidence and argument here. And I'm satisfied this demonstrates Mr F was acting as an agent of Abana.

One of the positions adopted by Abana is that it was duped by Mr F and various other parties, in respect of what happened in this and other cases. Recently it quoted a judgement 'WM Morrison Supermarkets plc ("Morrison's") v Various Claimants (Supreme Court, 1 April 2020)'. It drew on this outcome to infer that a principle can't be held responsible for a dishonest agent.

Leaving aside that it again seems to be accepting something which it has previously argued against i.e. that Mr F was its agent, I don't find the facts and circumstances of the particular Supreme Court judgement it quotes to be telling in the matter I'm considering.

I think Abana was aware of, expected, facilitated, guided and benefitted from the activities Mr F was undertaking, including giving advice on and making arrangements for SIPPs. I think Mr F had its actual authority to do this on its behalf.

Even if Abana wasn't fully aware of everything Mr F was doing, as I'll set out later, that isn't a defence here. It had to take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems.

So, I think Abana is responsible for Mr F's acts and omissions.

The arrangements in this case involved more than just pensions business – Mr F also made arrangements for the ePortfolio Solutions bond and unregulated investments, for example including his details on Mr B's application form and liaising with that business on his behalf. But, even if Abana didn't give its actual authority for Mr F to conduct these matters (and only intended him to be carrying on pension business), there's well established case law that if there's one act that was authorised by the principal, we may be able to look at other acts linked to it.

In Martin v Britannia [1999] EWHC 852 (Ch) (21 December 1999) and Tenetconnect Services Ltd v Financial Ombudsman and another [2018] EWHC 459 (Admin) (13 March 2018), the courts held that advice couldn't be confined to one part of an overall transaction and that acts can be "intrinsically linked". I agree with the investigator when he says this case is analogous. The arrangement of the SIPP and the subsequent investments in unregulated funds were so closely connected that they were intrinsically linked – part of the same transaction.

I think Abana can be held responsible for the advice it gave and the arrangements it made for the transfer of Mr B's Capgemini OPS funds into the Avalon SIPP and the investments in unregulated funds, which together ultimately resulted in the financial loss he's suffered.

In a recent submission to this Service, Abana has said this Service had failed to provide any evidence that there was a relevant relationship between Mr B and itself, as required under DISP 2.7.6. I'm satisfied that the detailed evidence and findings I've already set out, for example the documentation associated with Mr B's SIPP and investment fund applications include the details of Mr F and Abana, clearly demonstrate that he is an eligible complainant.

Abana was keen to draw my attention to evidence that Mr F was AR of JOMSL. I can confirm I've seen a copy of the AR agreement which appears to be effective from either 15 December 2011 or 1 July 2012. I've also seen a letter from JOMSL to Westerby dated 17 May 2013 confirming that Mr F had given his notice to terminate that agreement and that he was free to move his clients (and as we know, they were transferred to Abana).

Abana has also drawn my attention to Mr F's relationship with Westerby, for example it provided a business card with his and Westerby's details on. I don't think the fact that he had an association with the SIPP provider is in dispute.

Further, Abana has referred to a letter Mr B sent to JOMSL in 2016 complaining about his SIPP's with Westerby and Avalon and the associated investments. It says this shows that he knew JOMSL was his adviser. But this is a rather blinkered reading of the correspondence.

I say this because Mr B's complaint letter makes clear he'd always thought Mr F worked for Abana. It was Westerby which told him JOMSL were responsible for the advice and transfer of his pension. And so he was following up on what he'd been told.

Actually, Westerby was referring to the transfer of Mr B's BAE Systems pension, which was moved to one of its SIPP's in 2012, apparently following Mr F's involvement on behalf of JOMSL: But this was an earlier and separate transaction to that conducted by Mr F in 2014 when he was Abana's agent and advised Mr B to transfer his Capgemini OPS to an Avalon SIPP.

my conclusions on jurisdiction

I conclude this is a complaint that this Service can consider. In summary this is because:

- Mr B's complaint is about both the advice and the arrangements for the transfer of his Capgemini OPS funds to the Avalon SIPP and the investments made therein. So, it's a complaint about regulated activities.
- We can consider Mr B's complaint about the advice given and the arrangements made by Mr F. This is because I'm satisfied that he was responsible for the transfer of his Capgemini OPS to a SIPP with Avalon and the investments made therein, as an agent with the actual authority of Abana. It follows that Abana is responsible for his acts and omissions in this regard.

considering the merits of Mr B's complaint

As I'm satisfied this Service has jurisdiction to consider Mr B's complaint about Abana in relation to the advice given and the arrangements made by Mr F, I've gone on to consider all the available evidence and arguments to decide what's fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this case. And, after careful consideration, I'm upholding Mr B's complaint. I'll explain why.

The documentation I have from around the time of the events is incomplete. Abana provided very little information about Mr B's case. For example, I've not seen a fact find covering his circumstances, nor a record of his objectives for his pension arrangements. There's no document which captures Mr B's capacity for loss. And I haven't seen a report with recommendations.

In relation to another case Abana has said recently that this Service hasn't asked it for information. I'm afraid that position isn't credible. The cases I've seen have been ongoing now for many years. Abana has been asked for the information it holds in relation to the complaints, for example in Mr B's case a request was first sent in August 2017. It's had ample opportunity to make its case.

Mr B has provided us with testimony and some documentation which is relevant to the events he's complained about.

For reasons I can understand, several of Abana's former customers who have found themselves in a similar situation to Mr B have formed an informal group for communicating progress. I've not seen anything that concerns me about this development.

Nevertheless, as I would've done in any event, and in respect of both parties, I generally give more weight to testimony and evidence which is more contemporaneous with the events complained about. That's because it tends to give a more accurate account given the effect of the passage of time and the potential for the benefit of hindsight to colour matters.

Fortunately, we've been able to obtain some relevant paperwork from other sources, including Avalon as the provider of Mr B's SIPP. As previously established, this has been important in evidencing the role Mr F played on behalf of Abana in bringing about the transfer of Mr B's pension funds.

While there's conflicting information about what happened in 2014 and gaps in what we know, my role is to weigh the evidence we do have and to decide, on the balance of probabilities, what's most likely to have happened.

how does the regulatory framework inform the consideration of Mr B's case?

The first thing I considered in relation to Mr B's complaint is the extensive regulation around transactions like those performed by Mr F who I'm satisfied was acting as Abana's agent.

The FCA Handbook contains eleven Principles for businesses, which it says are fundamental obligations firms must adhere to (PRIN 1.1.2 G in the FCA Handbook). These include:

- Principle 2, which requires a firm to conduct its business with due skill, care and diligence
- Principle 3, which requires a firm to take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems
- Principle 6, which requires a firm to pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly

In British Bankers Association v The Financial Services Authority & Anor [2011] EWHC 999 (Admin), Ouseley J said [at paragraph 162]:

“The Principles are best understood as the ever-present substrata to which the specific rules are added. The Principles always have to be complied with. The Specific rules do not supplant them and cannot be used to contradict them. They are but specific applications of them to the particular requirement they cover. The general notion that the specific rules can exhaust the application of the Principles is inappropriate. It cannot be an error of law for the Principles to augment specific rules.”

And at paragraph 77:

“Indeed, it is my view that it would be a breach of statutory duty for the Ombudsman to reach a view on a case without taking the Principles into account in deciding what would be fair and reasonable and what redress to afford. Even if no Principles had been produced by the FSA, the FOS would find it hard to fulfil its particular statutory duty without having regard to the sort of high-level principles which find expression in the Principles, whoever formulated them. They are of the essence of what is fair and reasonable, subject to the argument about their relationship to specific rules.”

So, the Principles are relevant and form part of the regulatory framework that existed at the relevant time. They provide the overarching framework for regulation and must always be complied with by regulated firms like Abana. As such, I need to have regard to them in deciding this case.

Further, COBS 2.1.1 R requires a firm to act honestly, fairly and professionally in accordance with the best interests of its clients, in relation to designated investment business carried on for a retail client. The definition of “designated investment business” includes “arranging (bringing about) deals in investments”.

COBS 9.2.1R sets out the obligations on firms in assessing the suitability of investments. They are the same things that I look at when reaching a decision about whether the advice was suitable. In summary, the business must obtain the necessary information regarding: the consumer’s knowledge and experience in the investment field relevant to the advice; their financial situation; and their investment objectives.

Each case is different, but I’d expect the switch to be in the consumer’s best interests to make the advice suitable. And in this regard, I’d expect to see a comparison was made between the old pension and the new one.

In 2009 the then Financial Services Authority published a checklist for pension switching that I think is still helpful today. It highlighted four key issues it thought should be focussed on:

- Charges - has the consumer has been switched to a pension that is more expensive than their existing one(s) or a stakeholder pension, without good reason?
- Existing benefits - has the consumer lost benefits in the switch without good reason? This could include the loss of ongoing contributions from an employer, a guaranteed annuity rate or the right to take benefits early.
- Risk - has the consumer switched into a pension that doesn’t match their recorded attitude to risk (ATR) and personal circumstances?
- Ongoing fund management - has the consumer switched into a pension with a need for ongoing investment reviews but this was not explained, offered or put in place.

In July 2010 the FCA issued guidance about unregulated investments in a 'Good and Poor Practice report'.

The report contained examples of good practice in relation to unregulated investments, for example where a firm had robust controls in place and limited client exposure to 3%-5% of their portfolios, where those clients had been assessed as being suitable for unregulated investments. An example of bad practice given by the FCA was where up to 100% of a client's holdings were invested in a single unregulated collective investment scheme (UCIS).

Even if the investments made via his Avalon SIPP weren't part of a UCIS, they shared similar characteristics including the high-risk nature of the investment, being illiquid and subject to valuation uncertainty. So, I think these FCA findings are also relevant to my consideration.

It's also important to review the FCA's specific stance on advice provided about SIPP's. For example, in January 2013 it issued an industry alert which said:

"It has been brought to the FSA's attention that some financial advisers are giving advice to customers on pension transfers or pension switches without assessing the advantages and disadvantages of investments proposed to be held within the new pension. In particular, we have seen financial advisers moving customers' retirement savings to self-invested personal pensions (SIPPs) that invest wholly or primarily in high risk, often highly illiquid unregulated investments..."

"Financial advisers using this advice model are under the mistaken impression that this process means they do not have to consider the unregulated investment as part of their advice to invest in the SIPP and that they only need to consider the suitability of the SIPP in the abstract. This is incorrect. The FSA's view is that the provision of suitable advice generally requires consideration of the other investments held by the customer or, when advice is given on a product which is a vehicle for investment in other products (such as SIPPs and other wrappers), consideration of the suitability of the overall proposition, that is, the wrapper and the expected underlying investments in unregulated schemes..."

"If, taking into account the individual circumstances of the customer, the original pension product, including its underlying holdings, is more suitable for the customer, then the SIPP is not suitable. This is because if you give regulated advice and the recommendation will enable investment in unregulated items you cannot separate out the unregulated elements from the regulated elements. There are clear requirements under the FSA Principles and Conduct of Business rules."

did Abana, through the acts and omissions of Mr F, adhere to the regulatory requirements placed on it in effecting the transfer of Mr B's Capgemini OPS funds into a SIPP?

I don't think Abana met the regulatory requirements placed on it. I'll explain why.

Mr B had known Mr F for around 20 years. Mr F had been a mortgage adviser and Mr B had been happy with the advice he'd been given. They were on friendly terms, although Mr B would go years between seeing him. Mr F was a trusted source of financial advice.

Mr B had received advice from Mr F when he'd worked on behalf of JOSML. He'd given him advice about what to do with his BAE Systems pension in 2012. By the time he sought advice in 2014 about his Capgemini OPS, Mr F told him he worked for Abana. He says he had no reason to doubt this, he recalls the office branding where meetings took place and stationary including Mr F's business cards confirmed such.

At the time of the event complained about, Mr B was around 55 years old. He wanted to retire before he reached 60 because as a carer for his wife that would've allowed him to work part-time while still supporting her.

Mr B had built up his pension provisions with Capgemini during 17 years of service. One element of this was a defined benefits (DB) scheme, this had a total transfer value of around £244,000 and came with certain guarantees. In addition, Mr B had accumulated around £65,000 in a defined contribution plan also overseen by his employer.

Mr B says that in his discussions with Mr F he made it clear he didn't want to take any risks with his pension funds. He says he would've been happy if his new arrangements had only shown a 2% return above inflation. The investments were supposed to be made in a mixed portfolio with a low/medium risk profile. After all, Mr B said, his pension had taken years to build up.

Ultimately Mr B was persuaded to transfer his Capgemini pension, worth around £309,000 - which enjoyed valuable protections - into a SIPP with Avalon. Mr F told him he wasn't recommending Westerby as the SIPP provider this time because he wasn't happy with its management team. Mr F completed the paperwork in April 2014 and Mr B signed to give his agreement. Funds were transferred in June 2014.

Mr B took tax-free cash (TFC) of around £77,000. So, after allowing for a small cash balance to service the arrangement, the bulk of his residual pot of around £225,000 was invested through a business called ePortfolio Solutions. Initially monies appear to have been placed with the Brighton SPC - Kijani Commodity Fund (Kijani) and the Swiss Asset Micro Assist Inc Fund (SAMAIF).

Shortly after Mr B had transferred his pension, the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) engaged with Abana when it became aware the firm may have been operating in the UK outside of its permissions.

At the relevant time, Abana was an EEA authorised firm and passported into the UK under the insurance mediation directive (IMD). However, it appeared to be providing services in the UK, namely giving advice and making arrangements in relation to pensions, without the top-up permissions it required from the FCA.

Abana has told us the FCA directed that an independent third party should review the advice the firm had given UK consumers to determine whether it had been suitable, and if it hadn't been to assess any detriment. Abana has said that a consultancy service specialising in regulatory compliance was appointed to carry out this review.

In October 2015, Mr B was asked by the independent consultancy to provide information about the events leading up to the transfer of his Capgemini pension funds. It wrote to him in February 2016 with its conclusions. It said the advice he'd been given to establish the SIPP and invest in unregulated funds had been unsuitable. It noted an agent of Abana - Mr F - had been responsible.

The consultancy set out what steps Abana should take to put Mr B back into the position he would've been in had the transfer not taken place. By the summer of 2016 Mr B still hadn't received compensation and so he complained to the businesses he thought were responsible.

None of the parties Mr B contacted accepted it was at fault for what had happened to him and so he brought his complaint to this Service in June 2017. He said that the advice he received amounted to mis-selling. And that the loss of his pension funds has caused him considerable hardship, forcing him to apply for income support.

Mr F, as Abana's agent, had to obtain information from Mr B in order to understand essential facts about him. In order to advise him to transfer his OPS funds into the Avalon SIPP and invest in the unregulated funds, Mr F had to believe that:

- The service or recommended transaction met Mr B's investment objectives (including his attitude to risk, the purpose of investing and how long he wanted to invest for).
- Mr B was able to financially withstand the investment risks.
- Mr B had the necessary experience or knowledge to understand the risks involved.

I've not seen a fact-find covering Mr B's circumstances, nor a record of his objectives for his pension arrangements. I haven't seen a recommendations report. And I haven't seen a comparison of the performance, costs and benefits of his then existing Capgemini OPS with what was being proposed.

As with a couple of other Abana cases, it's managed to obtain documentation late on in the process which it's called on to support its position. In this instance it found a supplementary SIPP questionnaire, it says was completed, signed and dated by Mr B. It highlights his responses and selections to certain questions. Extracts from this follow:

"Does your job provide you with any experience in relation to the type of investment that you are considering within your pension fund ... Yes

I have worked in Financial Services and as part of my job I am aware of the different types of investments and compensation levels.

I have a good investment knowledge and understand the risk associated with the different types of investments available and the compensation rules surrounding these.

Maximising growth with a mixture of higher risk, specialist and mainstream investments [investment outlook].

I am happy to accept that an investment that I make within a SIPP may not be regulated by the FSA and as such would not be protected by their rules.

I am capable of making my own investment decisions and simply wish a SIPP to allow me to make these."

Abana says this may shed light on why Mr B didn't pay a fee and why there's no evidence advice was provided. I've thought carefully about this information and what it's said and would make the following observations.

At the top of the form Abana told us Mr B completed, it says (bolding is my emphasis):

"If you are considering a transfer into a SIPP and are considering investing into unregulated / alternative investments and or [sic] will be instructing your SIPP provider directly then prior to us providing you with an advice report on the suitability of this option, you must complete this questionnaire in order for us to verify how suitable these investments are for you."

“We will not provide advice or process a SIPP application where we believe alternative investments to be the case without this questionnaire having been completed in advance. Please complete this as accurately as you can. The information provided will be used by us as part of our advice to you.”

So actually, I think this is more evidence Mr F, on behalf of Abana, was involved in providing Mr B with advice and making arrangements for the transfer of his Capgemini pension. Although the questionnaire doesn't have branding, it's dated at the beginning of April 2014 and so is contemporaneous with when the events complained about were taking place.

Mr B says he never received a copy of the SIPP questionnaire. He reiterated that contrary to its contents, he had a low/medium risk appetite. His pensions had been built up over many years – he says he wouldn't have wanted to put them at risk. He didn't have any other pension provisions aside from his former BAE Systems and Capgemini schemes. Mr B characterised himself as a novice in terms of his experience of investments. He had no shares or savings.

There's a significant variance between Mr B's testimony and what's captured on the questionnaire Abana has forwarded to us. I tend towards Mr B's account. For example, he's told us he's never worked in financial services. He's a business process and IT specialist who's worked across defence and retail. His testimony seems to be borne out given the employers associated with the pension schemes he was a member of. And so in this regard alone, significant doubt is cast on the contents of the SIPP questionnaire.

Another problem for Abana is that the questionnaire sits alone, out of context and at odds with other evidence I've seen. If I concluded that Mr B signed the form, I can't be confident he did so in knowledge of what it contained. And even if he was aware, I've not seen how this information sat with the basic fact find I'd expect. I can't see how the information was critically reviewed. And I've not seen the suitability report which presumably ended up recommending the transfer of Mr B's pension fund into the Avalon SIPP.

Abana hasn't shown Mr F followed proper process, or if he did that this supported the subsequent transaction he advised and arranged. This is odd because in March 2014 when it was communicating with Westerby about the business Mr F was generating, it provided some assurance that proper documents were on file and that its compliance function had oversight of what he was doing.

I think Mr B must've been interested in achieving greater returns on his pension funds than he was receiving from Capgemini. But I don't think his risk appetite would've been high from what I have managed to glean about his experience and situation from the information I do have. And crucially I don't think he understood the benefits, protections and guarantees he was giving up.

I've not seen a proper analysis of Mr B's capacity for loss at the time. But we know his pension provision was modest. And while taking on more risk to build up funds might've been something to consider if he'd been younger and had other resources to fall back on, Mr B was already 55 when Mr F gave him advice and aside from his pensions and his home, he didn't appear to have any other assets.

As we know, Mr B was persuaded to transfer around £309,000 from his Capgemini OPS into the Avalon SIPP in April 2014. He took TFC of around £77,000. The bulk of what remained was initially invested in two unregulated funds through a business called ePortfolio Solutions. These were called Kijani and SAMAIF and they accounted for over 95% of his pot. These were suspended and it appears he's lost the vast bulk of his pension provision.

I think it's telling that an independent third party, specialising in regulatory compliance concluded in 2016 that Mr F, on behalf of Abana, had been responsible for what had happened to Mr B. And it set out how Abana should put things right. As we know it ultimately failed to act on the outcome of the review.

Further, I've seen a communication between Abana and Mr F from April 2014, which I think is also relevant. In this email exchange Abana provides feedback to Mr F about his approach to suitability reports. This was provided by its compliance function and appears to show Mr F's practices were lacking, for example in relation to advice around risk appetite.

Overall, I've concluded Mr F wasn't acting with due skill, care or diligence when he effected Mr B's transfer of his Capgemini pension funds into an Avalon SIPP and unregulated funds. He was in breach of Principle 2 and COBS 9.2.1R, and therefore so was Abana.

I find Mr B's testimony plausible and persuasive. And I think it's of note that Abana has never made the case that the transfer of his OPS funds into the Avalon SIPP and investments in unregulated funds was an appropriate or fair transaction.

Rather, Abana's response to this Service has largely focussed on why it wasn't responsible for what had happened, and how it was the fault of others. It's failed to engage effectively with the merits of this case, despite clear evidence of the relationship it had with Mr F. I won't rehearse the arguments already made in my decision, but I've concluded that Mr F was acting as an agent of Abana with its actual authority to arrange SIPPs.

I've already mentioned the letter Abana sent to a number of its clients in June 2015 which I think is very telling, it begins:

"...IMPORTANT: Advice given to you by Abana Lda ("Abana") in relation to your SIPP with Westerby Trustee Services Limited...Why are we writing to you?"

I am writing to you with reference to the advice you received by your former advisor [Mr F] ...concerning your investments held with Asset Management International (AMI) under your Self-invested Personal Pension (SIPP). It has recently come to our attention that Abana were not authorised to give the advice we gave to you regarding your Investments as we do not have the correct regulatory permissions..."

In permitting Mr F to conduct pensions business Abana would've known or at the very least should've known that such activity was outside of its regulatory permissions which were restricted to insurance mediation activities. It didn't take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems. And this is a breach of Principle 3.

Mr F gave advice on and made arrangements for the transfer of Mr B's Capgemini OPS funds into a SIPP, which would be dealing in unregulated investments. He transmitted the necessary documentation. In doing so, he led Avalon to believe Mr B had been advised on the transaction and that this activity was done with Abana's authority.

Abana has asserted that SIPPs are actually straight-forward for customers to understand. I think the number of complaints brought to this Service about problems in this area suggests the opposite in some circumstances. And certainly, when considering the portfolio put in place for Mr B which wasn't diversified, with interests in unregulated funds which weren't a match for his risk appetite, I think its assertion is ill-considered.

There's no credible evidence Mr B was an experienced or sophisticated investor. As I've set out, he thought the new arrangements being recommended were low/medium risk. A small amount of due diligence would've exposed the arrangements being made for him as inappropriate.

Mr F would've been aware Mr B was being exposed to significant risks in the investments he was facilitating. For example, there's no evidence Mr B had the capacity to withstand potential losses. Mr F would've known unregulated funds could be illiquid, meaning Mr B might have difficulty getting access to his money. The funds were highly specialised and out of the ordinary. And they were subject to valuation uncertainty.

So, I'm satisfied that Mr F didn't act honestly, fairly and professionally, and in accordance with Mr B's best interests, in relation to designated investment business he was carrying out. He breached Principle 6 and COBS 2.1.1R, and Abana is responsible for his acts and omissions.

To conclude I don't think the transfer of Mr B's Capgemini pensions into the Avalon SIPP and the unregulated investments could sensibly be regarded as fair to him. As such I think Mr F, as Abana's agent, failed to meet the regulatory requirements I've set out when providing the advice and making the arrangements. So, taking all the circumstances of the case into account, it's fair and reasonable to uphold this complaint against Abana, and for Abana to put things right.

putting things right

I'm upholding Mr B's case. So, he needs to be returned to the position he would've been in now - or as close to that as reasonably possible – had it not been for the failures which I hold Abana responsible for.

If Abana had done everything it should've, I don't think Mr B would've transferred funds from his OPS into the Avalon SIPP and high-risk unregulated investments, and so he wouldn't have suffered the financial loss he's experienced. So, Abana Unipessoal Lda needs to put things right in the following way:

1. Calculate a notional loss Mr B has suffered as a result of making the transfer of his Capgemini pension funds

(a) In relation to the defined benefit element of his occupational pension scheme

Abana should undertake a redress calculation in line with the Pension Review methodology, as amended by the FCA in October 2017. A figure should be derived up to the date of calculation. And this should be carried out using the most recent financial assumptions published.

Abana will need to contact the Department for Work and Pensions to obtain Mr B's contribution history to the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS or S2P). These details should then be used to include any 'SERPS adjustment' in the calculation, which will take into account the impact of leaving the occupational scheme on Mr B's SERPS/S2P entitlement.

(b) In relation to the defined contribution element of his occupational pension scheme

Abana should obtain the notional value of Mr B's previous defined contribution plan, as at the date of calculation. So, as if it hadn't been transferred to the Avalon SIPP. It will need to obtain the value of the plan as invested.

If there are any difficulties in obtaining a notional valuation then the FTSE UK Private Investors Income Total Return Index (prior to 1 March 2017, the FTSE WMA Stock Market Income Total Return Index) should be used as I'm satisfied that's a reasonable proxy for the type of return that could've been achieved if Mr B's pension had remained invested in his previous defined contribution plan.

Abana will then have the total notional value for Mr B's previous pensions (a+b). It should then find the current value of his SIPP, including investments and any cash held. Concerning the valuation here – the approach to be taken is set out in step 2.

Mr B took TFC in 2014. There may also have been other withdrawals or contributions to account for. After confirming the detailed position, then the value Abana obtains or the calculations Abana makes can assume these adjustments would still have occurred and on the same dates. These adjustments are to be applied pro-rata to the calculated value of his defined benefit and defined contribution funds at the appropriate dates.

The adjusted, as appropriate, like for like difference between the notional value of Mr B's former OPS pension funds and the current value of his SIPP will be his basic financial loss that Abana needs to redress.

2. Pay a commercial value to buy any investments which cannot currently be redeemed

To close Mr B's SIPP and avoid ongoing fees, the investments need to be crystallised. To do this Abana should ask the SIPP provider to determine an amount it's willing to accept as a commercial value for the investments and Abana can then pay this to take ownership of them.

If Abana is unwilling or unable to purchase the investments, the value should be assumed to be nil for the purposes of the loss calculation. In this instance, where Abana has compensated Mr B fully in line with my assessment, then it may ask him to provide an undertaking to account to it for the net amount of any payment the SIPP may receive from the investment. That undertaking should allow for the effect of any tax and charges on the amount he may receive from the investment and any eventual sums he would be able to access from the SIPP.

Abana will need to meet any costs in drawing up this undertaking.

3. Pay an amount into Mr B's SIPP so that the transfer value is increased by the loss calculated (resulting from 1 and 2) or pay him an equivalent cash sum notionally adjusted for tax

If compensation is paid into Mr B's SIPP, payment should allow for the effect of charges and any available tax relief, so that he is in the same position as if he'd stayed in his original occupational pension scheme and plan.

If paying compensation into Mr B's SIPP would conflict with any existing protection or allowance and / or the plan is closed and Abana takes on his investments, then it should pay him compensation as a cash sum. In doing so it should make a notional deduction to allow for income tax that would otherwise have been paid.

If Mr B is a basic rate taxpayer, the notional allowance would reduce the amount payable (after any allowance for tax-free cash), equivalent to the current basic rate of tax.

4. SIPP fees

If the investments aren't removed from Mr B's SIPP, and it remains open after compensation has been paid, Abana should pay him an amount equivalent to five years of future fees. This should allow enough time for the issues with the investments to be dealt with, and for them to be removed from the SIPP.

If, after five years, Abana wants to keep the SIPP open, and to maintain an undertaking for any future payments under the investment, it must agree to pay any further future SIPP fees. If Abana fails to pay the SIPP fees, Mr B should then have the option of trying to cancel the investments to allow the plan to be closed.

5. Trouble and upset

I also think Mr B has been caused upset as a result of Abana's actions. The sudden loss of a substantial element of his pension fund would have come as a shock to him and has clearly had a significant impact. In recognition of this it should pay him £500 for the trouble and upset he's experienced.

putting things right – summary

I can award fair compensation to be paid by a financial business, given the regulations that apply in this case, of up to £150,000, plus any interest and costs I consider appropriate. If I think that fair compensation is or could be more than the £150,000 limit, I may recommend that the business pays the balance.

Decision and award: I consider that fair compensation should be calculated as set out above (steps 1-5). My decision is that Abana Unipessoal Lda should pay Mr B the amount produced by those calculations - up to a maximum of £150,000, plus any interest.

Recommendation: If the amount produced by the calculations of fair compensation exceeds £150,000, I recommend that Abana Unipessoal Lda pays Mr B the balance.

This recommendation is not part of my determination or award. Abana Unipessoal Lda doesn't have to do what I recommend. It's unlikely that Mr B can accept my decision and go to court to ask for any balance. Mr B may want to get independent legal advice before deciding whether to accept my final decision.

my final decision

For the reasons I've already set out, I'm upholding Mr B's complaint. I require Abana Unipessoal Lda to pay compensation to him as I've indicated above. It should pay the compensation within 28 days of Mr B's acceptance of my final decision.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I'm required to ask Mr B to accept or reject my decision before 16 December 2020.
